

New Microscope Aids OSC Research

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Secrets of nature's hidden make-up can be unraveled with the aid of this electron microscope at Oregon State college. An ordinary microscope has a 3,000 power magnification limit. This instrument enables scientists to magnify such things as milk globules and measles viruses up to 100,000 times. Plant diseases also are viewed up close with this photographic microscope. Shown operating the precision-built instrument are John G. Skinner, electron microscopist, and Dr. F. A. Gillfillan, OSC dean of science.

KEEP OREGON GREEN

With a continued increase in Oregon's population, mostly comprised of newcomers who know little of the forest fire hazard and problem, and with a heavy growth of underbrush as well as slashing on the ground that is now fast drying out, the forest fire danger this year is now with us.

Thousands of people will go to the forest areas to spend summer weekends. The Keep Oregon Green Association addresses a special appeal to the hundreds of thousands of Oregon residents to acquaint themselves with the urgent need of great prudence. A trip along the Wilson River Highway, through the great Tillamook Burn, or up the Santiam Highway to Detroit Dam would serve as an unforgettable object lesson.

Dean Walter McCulloch is Chairman of the Keep Oregon Green organization. In a recent statement, Dean McCulloch demanded Oregonians that each of them has a stake in our forests. "The forests supply us with our largest payroll," he said, "with recreational areas unsurpassed in the nation, with a watershed cover for our rivers and streams, with homes for wildlife. Protection of these great natural resources by fire now becomes a civic responsibility of the highest order."

Motor Vehicle Travel Shows Decline This Year

A 1½ percent drop in Oregon motor vehicle travel so far this year was reported today by the Oregon Traffic Safety Commission.

Latest month to show a drop was April when travel fell off about 12,000,000 miles from that recorded for April a year ago. So far this year, January has been the only month to show an increase in total motor vehicle mileage.

The rather low travel figure for April of 589,990,150 miles was matched by a drop in traffic deaths with 31 reported for that month. The state's death rate was 5.3 persons killed in each 100 million miles of travel. This compares with a 6.5 death for April in 1956.

A Thought for the Day

By Mrs. Helen Davis
1. The Master Key to Life—"the will of God."
2. The Matchless Purpose in Life—"doeth the will of God."
3. The Magnificent Goal of Life—"abideth forever."
"The righteous are precious to the Lord, and therefore He refines them with afflictions. We should not desire to escape our trials, for they are the channels of our best blessings."
