--Mill Ends--

Mr. and Mrs. George Dickie and Yvonne and Mr. and Mrs. Lester Werner and two daughters spent several days last week at Sandpoint, Idaho, where they visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Webb. The Webb family formerly lived in Mill City. He is a brother of Mrs. Dickie and Mrs. Werner.

Mrs. Charles French received word today from Mrs. J. K. Harris, who is now living in Los Angeles. She asked to have her Enterprise sent to their new address. They were forced to move to a new location when an adjoining apartment was damaged by fire on July 4. The Harris' household effects were not damaged, however.

It has been learned here that the Bill Mannings (Millicent Olin), who had recently bought a home at Novato, Calif., where he was stationed with Hamilton Air Base, have been transferred to Alaska. Mrs. Manning and younger daughter, Virginia, visited here last August when she attended the reunion of her graduating class at the high school.

Annual Aerial Forestry Survey Being Made

The annual aerial survey of Oregon's 27,000,000 acres of forest land which is for the purpose of locating areas of forest insect infestations and their extent, got under way in southern Oregon recently, according to Al Larsen, state forestry department official who is in charge of the forest insect and disease section. Larsen will act as pilot of the state plane for the entire project. Observers who will pin-point areas of infestation are W. J. Buckhorn and Peter Orr, entomologists for the Pacific Northwest Forest and Range Experiment station.

In western Oregon the observers will watch closely for areas infested by the balsam wooly aphid or chermes, an insect that attacks the true firs, Larsen stated. He indicated that the 1956 survey showed 150,000 acres of scattered spots of infestation extending as far south as Crater Lake. Another area of serious infestation was found in the Coast Range in Polk county, he added.

"Entomologists have expressed considerable concern over the possible spread of the chermes infestation since no practical method of control has yet been developed," stated

Larsen. "Salvage is the only solution and this is economically impossible in many instances because of isolation of the areas. Of extreme importance is the threat to wilderness areas, national parks and other recreational areas within the forests."

It is expected that the western Oregon survey will be completed near the end of July and the project will then be transferred to the eastern part of the state where the observers will be primarily concerned in the end of July and the project will forester stated. He pointed out that in spite of successful control projects on 4,000,000 acres of forest land there was still 500,000 acres of infested forested mapped last year.

"The areas are so scattered and isolated that further control work was not considered necessary at that time but it does not indicate a definite end to the infestation," said Larsen. "It can build up again. The survey will indicate the exact status at the present time."

During the flights over the state the observers will also watch for infestation by the bark beetles, areas of mortality through tree diseases and areas where porcupines may have made serious inroads into the young pine stands.

Larsen added that this information will all be checked through ground studies by experienced entomologists who will determine the accuracy of the observers' findings, the intensity of the infestations, location and acreage. This will all be used as a basis for recommendations as to future action in control projects, Larsen added.

Those who enforce the law should set the example of obedience.
