1958 Gas Tax Collections Show Slight Increase

Oregon gasoline tax collections last year increased nearly two per cent, the Department of Motor Vehicles reported today.

At the same time, the department said an estimate of travel for the year, based on gasoline sales, indicated that 7½ billion miles were driven on the state's streets and highways.

Despite this fact, the state's mileage death rate, a figure which compares miles driven with number of people killed in accidents, dropped from 6.3 deaths per 100 million miles in 1957 to 6.0 last year.

The state collected $37,814,892 in gasoline tax during the year and through the end of December had refunded $3,258,674 to non-highway users.

Except for administrative expense, which last year was less than a fourth of one per cent of the amount collected, the gasoline tax is earmarked for the highway fund. Since its inception in 1919, the law has made possible turning over more than $500 million dollars to the highway fund.

Officials said they thought the recent gasoline price war may have affected gasoline sales considerably more than some thought because the December increase in gallonage and mileage was higher than normal.

A comparison of tax receipts for December, 1957, with December, 1958, showed an 11.88% increase. The two previous months, October and November, had recorded increases of five and two per cent, respectively. Other months with increases were January, February, March, May and September.
