The local musicians will join some 550 delegates from 107 Oregon and Washington high schools for the three-day event. They will rehearse under the guidance of three outstanding Northwest conductors for the grand concert Saturday evening, April 14, starting at 8 p. m. at the Forest Grove Union high school gym. Concert will feature a 20-piece band, 100-piece orchestra and 230-voice chorus.

Directing the choral group will be Dr. Charles C. Hirt, head of the department of church music and director of choral organizations at the University of Southern California. Weighing the baton for the orchestra will be Donald Thulean, dean of the School of Music at Pacific University and recently named temporary conductor of the Portland Junior Symphony.

Highway Dept. To Change Center Line Color to White

You'll wonder where the yellow went!

The yellow center line so familiar to Oregon highway users will soon disappear as state highway traffic line crews get their 1960 painting season underway, according to an announcement made by W. C. Williams, state highway engineer.

The dashed center line, dashed lane lines, and solid edge stripes will be painted white this year conforming to the national standards set by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads. All other marking, though, will remain yellow, Williams said.

Yellow will be used for double center lines, curb markings, no passing zone barrier stripes, stop lines, crosswalk lines, pavement word and symbol markings, joggle bars, lines along joggle bars, the face and top of curbed and raised islands and painted channelizing islands. It is expected that cities and counties in Oregon will adopt these standards either during 1960 or no later than 1961.

Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him.—(Romans 6:9)

Jesus, our Redeemer, Saviour, Friend—ever present, always patient and understanding in loving kindness—walks and talks with us this very day as He did with the people who knew Him in ancient days, when we free ourselves of sin and in prayer seek His presence

Heavy Snows in March Help Irrigation Outlook in Valley

The 1960 water supply outlook for the irrigation season in Willamette Valley remains "fair" although improved slightly during the last month due to above normal precipitation over most of the valley according to a report released by W. T. Frost, Snow Survey Supervisor for U. S. Department of Agriculture, Soil Conservation Service, Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station and State Engineer, State of Oregon.

Reservoir storage is above normal for this time of year in the five multi-purpose reservoirs and soil moisture improved during the last month. Snow cover along the Cascades had a good increase during the month but is only 61 percent of the 1943-57 average. In general, it is 23 percent better than last year at this time but was melted back to fairly high elevations during the month by warm temperatures and rain.

Soil moisture conditions were improved significantly during March by rain and snow melt on all the higher watersheds under deep snow cover. These high watershed soils will still absorb some snow melt water. Storage in the five multi-purpose reservoirs in the valley is above normal for this time of year.

Streamflow was above normal in most streams of the valley during the last month. The Middle Fork of the Willamette flowed 137 percent of average (-943-57) last month but still contributor only 65 percent of average for the October-March period, according to information furnished by U. S. Geological Survey, Portland, Oregon.

Forecasts of spring and summer runoff have come up on the larger streams and now vary from 69 percent on the North Santiam to 91 percent on the main Willamette at Salem. Smaller streams without reservoir storage are still expected to have a "fair" to "poor" late season flow.

Statewide, Oregon's water supply outlook for the spring and summer months of 1960 has changed slightly during March but still varies from "low average" conditions to "poor" conditions. Heavy March rains brought a satisfactory "priming" of watershed soils at low and moderate elevations and added good catches of water to many reservoirs but increased the snowpack only at the highest elevations.

The next report on snow surveys and water supply conditions will be issued on May 8, 1960.
