 Are you tired of working? Would you like someone to do all your menial little jobs? Buy a Freshman! The Freshman class held a slave sale at the beginning of this week, slaves belong to their masters until Friday. With the prices they were bringing, Freshmen are probably considerably richer now. And boys with lots of green stuff had a chance to build a harem the easy way. Freshmen and Juniors took ITED tests last Thursday and Friday. These were to test educational development. Since we were given more than ample time to finish each test, many of us had to sit for long periods of time with nothing to do, until some enterprising individuals bought and distributed comic books.

For the past couple of weeks, boys physical fitness tests, which show us how out of shape we are as compared with the rest of the nation. After attempting to outdo everyone else, quite a few boys are pretty sore and stiff.

How Education Started in Linn Co. To Be Told Jan. 27

Facts and anecdotes on "How Education Started in Linn County" will be related at the January 27 meeting of the Linn County Historical Society by Levitt Horner of Pleasant Valley. The meeting will start at 2 p. m. in the county courthouse in Albany, and is open to the public.

A review of the past year's activities and accomplishments is on the agenda, and officers for this year will be installed by the Rev. Fred Swanson of Lebanon. Re-elected were Floyd Jenks of Tangent, president; Mrs. William Volkman of Albany, vice-president; and Mrs. W. J. Kelly of Seio, secretary. Robert Potts of Albany is the new treasurer.

Membership in the society is open to everyone interested, and dues are nominal. A special rate is available for joint membership in the county and state historical societies.

In his "second inaugural" address last week, Governor Mark Hatfield offered a multitude of recommendations, suggestions and challenges to Oregon's 52nd Legislature. As he delivered his 40-minute talk, it became increasingly evident that this year's legislative session probably will be the longest ever.

Few subjects were omitted in the comprehensive address. Its contents provide a good indication of the many—and complicated—problems confronting Oregon's senators and representatives in the weeks and months ahead.

The plea for a more manageable, more efficient and more self-sufficient state government was the underlying theme of Governor Hatfield's message. He advocated reversal of the "commonplace" trend "to turn our backs on the problems and our palms to the federal government." The governor added that "... we can do much in our day to swing the pendulum back to recognize not so much states' rights as states' obligations. We can make Oregon a proving ground for a new spirit of self-sufficiency if we but have the will."

Most legislators recognize that they probably will have to come up with more state revenue, which means new or additional taxes. The real problem now seems to be a matter of determining what form—or forms—and "how much?"

Governor Hatfield presented a strong case for his net receipts tax, which would broaden the state income tax base by increasing the number of taxpayers and reduce the rates. He pointed out that 90 percent of Oregon's citizens have annual incomes of $10,000 or less. He offered a comparison of his proposed net receipts tax plan with that of Washington's sales tax plan, and he claimed: "With an income of $4,250, the tax bill for a family of four in Washington would be $131; in Oregon $43.

 "With an income of $5,250, Washington tax would be $54; Oregon's $57.
 "With an income of $7,250, Washington—$201; Oregon—$137.
 "With an income of $9,250, Washington—$240; Oregon—$235."

Although the governor proposed this tax in two previous sessions, this is the first time no budget surplus has been available. This means the legislature might give somewhat more serious consideration to the plan this year, since the need for new tax revenue is greater now.
