Mrs. McClintock Tells of Astronaut Cooper in Hawaii

Following is a portion of a letter received by Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Cree from their daughter, Mrs. William McClintock, who is now living in Hawaii where her husband is stationed with the U. S. Marines, telling of the activities going on in the islands.

"This has been an exciting week for us . . . beginning last Sunday with the observance of Armed Forces week here in the islands. . . and closing with the arrival of Astronaut Cooper at Hickam Air Base. The family was on hand for both. Kanoehe Marine Corp Air Station (where Bill is bus master for station transportation) was open to the public. In addition to displays the marines opened historic Kansas Tower. The tower provides an unequalled panoramic view of Windward Oahu. It was atop this hill, some 437 feet above sea level, that the first American casualty of World War II was suffered. A lone Marine sentry was in the tower when the Japanese attacked on December 7, 1941. He was critically wounded by the enemy air craft straffing the then Naval Air Station enroute to Pearl Harbor. Displays included all the air craft-crash trucks and equipment, survival gear, flight handling equipment, parachute, aviation ordnance including rockets, bombs and in flight refueler system.

Throughout the week news of the orbiting was followed on tv and radio—at home and in the classrooms at Kainalu school where Patty and Mark attend classes. Then on Saturday we went to Hickam Air Base to see Astronaut Cooper step from the helicopter that brought him from the U. S. S. Kearsarge. Several thousand persons were on hand at Hickam Air Base where Cooper was greeted by his family and other military officials including the highest military man in the Pacific—Admiral Harry D. Felt. Governor John Burns welcomed Cooper on behalf of the state and the mayor of Honolulu commented that this turnout was probably the biggest yet in Hawaii. He mentioned that it was a larger turnout than when Eisenhower visited in 1953 and General Douglas MacArthur in 1951 when he returned from Japan. Police estimated the cheering throngs of people at 150,000. Signs at Hickam, along the parade route and at the palace where a reception was said, "aloha," "Super Cooper," etc. Cooper wore leis of red carnations, white pikaki and plumeria from his wife and two daughters. Cooper and his wife were met here and were married at the Hickam Air Base Chapel not far from where they were reunited. Their older daughter, Camela has a middle Hawaiian name, Keoki, and was born here. Both girls wore leis of orchids and Mrs. Trudy Cooper's flowers were pikaki strands. The helicopter that brought Cooper to the air base from the U. S. S. Kearsarge, 60 miles away, came via the Arizona Memorial where the astronaut lowered a wreath in observance of Armed Forces Day. At the palace a hulu troupe was on hand for a typical Hawaiian Aloha. Some 200 guests at the reception included many former class mates of both Astronaut and Mrs. Cooper. They were fellow students at the University of Hawaii in 1946. Coopers left Hickam Air
