IT'S YOUR LAW

Respect for Law Makes Democracy Live

Confidential Communications

Under the law what you as a client tell your lawyer in confidence he may tell no one else without your consent.

Nor can a judge order him or his professional employees (like secretaries) to reveal such communications in court.

Why have such a privilege? Chiefly, to do justice; it encourages clients to tell their lawyers what they have to know to help and to advise them fully; things about their family, business, and private affairs, their hopes, fears, and ambitions.

No lawyer may speak of certain things, even after a client dies. For a client may well have to give his lawyer details which, if revealed, might harm those he most wanted to protect.

Yet, in some very rare cases, to help carry out the client's desires after death, a lawyer may have to reveal a confidence, under certain safeguards, to uphold his client's purpose.

What are confidential communications?

Anything a client tells his lawyer when he seeks advice about his personal, business, or legal affairs—talks and letters, photographs, charts, and other documents and records.

Confidential communications protect you as the client, not your lawyer. If you break the confidence, a lawyer may also have to talk, for the communication is no longer confidential. You may break a confidence by testifying about it, or by having unauthorized persons hear or see what was communicated.

No lawyers may keep quiet about a crime or fraud a client has told him he plans to commit. But afterwards, an accused person may talk freely to his lawyer. Even if guilty, he has a right to have his side of the story presented to the court as it may affect his punishment.

A person in trouble needs to talk to someone without fear that what he says will become public.

Certain other people, such as physicians and clergymen, may receive privileged communications. As a rule, no physician may speak about things he learned while treating a patient without his consent. The patient should have a free mind to tell his doctor many things. This privilege may not always hold in some criminal and personal injury trials, not does it hold always after a patient dies. Again, as a rule, a clergyman may not report confessions without the confessor's consent.

Oregon lawyers offer this column as a public service. No person should apply or interpret any law without the aid of an attorney, who is completely advised of the facts involved. Even a slight variance in facts may change the application of the law.)
