

Grade School Gallops

PARENTS COME TO SCHOOL.
By Mike Logan

On the night of November 20, the parents of grade school students visited the rooms of their children to see the work the students had done, and also see displays they had made.

When the parents walked into Mrs. Parker's room they might have thought they were seeing double, but they soon found out that this was wrong, when the kids showed them what they did. They had painted paper plates and put shirts and sweaters on them. They then put these on their chairs at each desk. Mrs. Norrie's second grade did poems and other writing. Miss Grimstad's room also did much paper work. They also had a pine display. Miss Boone's room had many interesting things. They had a tooth from a very large female baleen whale and an interesting collection.

Mrs. Williams' fifth grade also had a display of manuscript papers and individual silhouettes. The sixth grade had a display of hand-writing and had a tumbling exhibition. Their teachers are Mrs. Wright and Mr. Hayes.

The seventh grade had many kinds of bulletin board displays and original poems.

The eighth grade had folders, bulletin boards, and science exhibits.

About 189 parents were present. The room mothers served cookies and coffee in each room. We were glad to have our parents attend, and hope they will return soon.

The added color in orange peelings is not harmful, so use those peelings to candy for the holiday season ahead. The Food and Drug Administration keeps close tab on these food additives. A few years ago, some colorings were banned and new ones substituted which have government approval.

Up and Down The Avenue

By Don Moffatt

The events from Friday through Monday will go down in history as one of the black periods for the United States. During this time our president, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, was assassinated in the prime of his life and political career—46 years old—and at a time when he was doing his best to preserve peace in a troubled world. The accused assassin not only killed our president but a policeman, who was acting in line of duty. Had it not been for a faulty cartridge, or gun, he could very well have been charged with yet another murder, when he was apprehended in the Texas theater. Then on Sunday, a self-appointed "god" decided to pass judgment on the accused Oswald. He shot him down in cold blood as he was being taken from the Dallas city jail building. Thus is the outline of the chain of events which made history over this black weekend.

It makes one wonder just what all our religious training, or lack of training, over the years has accomplished for us. What has happened to the belief that we should love one another? It is possible that we always will have fanatic and emotionally unbalanced men and women in our world. The killing of our president is the fourth time this has occurred in our history. It doesn't seem to register with us when other countries murder their leaders. They do it so often that it becomes commonplace—but here in America we have thought we were more civilized. We cannot condemn a whole nation, though, for the dastardly acts of the few, we can, and must continue to work for the betterment of the world. I have never believed that this was a concerted attempt to disrupt our government. I felt this young man had the feeling that he had been persecuted or picked on all through his life. He was a loner, and used this method to "get even." Anyone who does attempt to overthrow our nation in an act of this type, will find that it only tends to bring us closer together. It brings us to the full realization that trouble always knits us into one "family." In times like these, all political and religious differences are dropped and we meet on the one common ground of profound grief that our president has been taken from us by either a political crackpot or one who is unstable in his thinking.

The killer of Oswald solved nothing. It may have acted as a brake to the justice which would have been meted out to him by our duly elected courts of law. Surely all evidence pointed to his guilt, but if there may have been some underlying and planned reason for Oswald killing our president, we had a better chance of finding it out with him alive.

Jack Ruby probably did what he thought was right, but it solved nothing, only put another black mark against justice. People should learn not to act upon emotion alone. I do not think that we are becoming a nation of "kooks" but I do think that this wanton killing of three men should certainly have a sobering effect upon each one of us. Maybe each one of us at some time or another has had enough hatred in our hearts to do some terrible deed, but somewhere along the line there has been some training which has served to bring us to our senses before we went that far. We now must be brought to the full realization that as usual we never appreciate the good things we have until we lose them. In this instance, President John F. Kennedy, a man who was doing his job to the best of his ability has been taken from us. The reaction of other countries around the globe gives testimony to the high esteem in which he was held by all peoples. He will be greatly missed by all of us, and each of us should hang his head in shame that in this day and age, and in a country which is supposed to be highly enlightened, a terrible deed of this type could have been perpetrated.

Our deepest sympathy goes to Mrs. Kennedy and her entire family in this hour.

We also offer our prayers to our new President Lyndon B. Johnson who has had the terrific pressure of governing this great nation dropped upon his shoulders without any warning. He is a man of integrity and political experience, and with cooperation from both political parties, he is certainly going to do his best to carry on.

It is with rather heavy hearts that we go into the Thanksgiving season.

The assassination of President John F. Kennedy will dampen the spirit of this usual day of thanksgiving and feasting. However each one of us should pause, and give thanks to God for our many blessings. We must be thankful that we live in a country where we have a wealth of great men to assist in conducting our business of government. We should be thankful that we have President Johnson, a man of considerable experience in government.

We have many blessings, even though we have been dealt a severe blow. However, the sun will shine again, and it is a better world by far in that we have had the services of John F. Kennedy for three years. We must use these trying times to strengthen ourselves and to see that these foul acts are not committed again.

The liquid in canned vegetables contains about one third of the soluble food value. It's important to save.

Don't overdry those stretch nylon garments. Repeated overdrying will make the fibers brittle and incapable of springing back into shape. Turn garments inside out and wash only long enough to get them clean. Use a gentle action to avoid pilling.
