People find that giving repairable clothing to Goodwill Industries is easier because many supermarkets provide space for a Goodwill collection box. But, these boxes don't enable one to give furniture and other large items needed by Goodwill. Such things, left on the ground outside the box clutter the area. For giving large items to Goodwill, phone for a truck—one will be sent promptly.

Jack Flook Elected Chr. of Calif. Public Welfare Staff

VALLEJO (Calif.)—Jack W. Flook, son of Mrs. George M. Flook of Mill City, Oregon, a county investigator for the last 18 months has been elected chairman of the Seloano County Department of Public Welfare's staff organization and will serve in this capacity until next June.

The staff organization consists of more than 125 members with an additional 75 to be added before the year's end. Members include the professional social workers assigned to the administration of the many different social welfare programs conducted in Soano County in conjunction with the state and federal government.

During World War II he served with the investigative branch of the Department of Intelligence and later in a public relations capacity. As a civilian, prior to the Korean Conflict, he served as managing editor of the Merced Sun Star, a small California daily newspaper. Record Bean Harvest Expected Bean pickers will be in great demand in the mid-Willamette Valley of Oregon as the largest harvest in the states' history got underway this weekend.

The Bean Processor's Committee, which represents growers for 16 of the nation's largest processors, said this week that the acreage of both pole and bush beans were up from last years' record. It was reported that there would be a bumper crop again this year and that adequate housing would be available.

Growers in the area reported that three cents per pound, including bonus, would be paid, and many of the growers are expected to pay three cents straight through the season as they did last year.

A spokesman for the Committee emphasized that thousands of pickers would be needed to harvest this year's crop which is centered around Salem, Oregon and other towns in the mid-Willamette Valley. He stated that pickers from out-of-state would have an excellent opportunity to earn good pay and, at the same time, enjoy a pleasant vacation in Oregon's mild climate. Good picking will last to about the middle of September.

On arrival in the Valley, a spokesman at the Salem Employment Office said pickers should contact the nearest employment office for direction to the fields.

It's Your Law PROPERTY OWNER'S LIABILITY

A popular misconception of law has it that everyone who is injured on another's property is entitled to recover all damages he may suffer from the owner of that property.

Property owners themselves often believe this erroneous principle, and it is not uncommon for a home owner, discussing an injury at his home, to remark, reluctantly, "Well, I guess I'm liable—the accident happened on my property."

This is not the law. The concept of "fault" is still essential to a recovery for damages in all but a few specialized fields of law and mere ownership of private property does not produce the necessary "fault" for recovery.

In most cases of accidents on his residence property, a home owner will not be liable for the resulting injuries. This is because most visitors at his home and on his residence property will be social guests.

Towards his guests a home owner owes the duty only of refraining from willful and wanton misconduct, and of warning them of any hidden traps. He is under no obligation to make good their damages.

This rule is derived from the nature of the relationship between host and his guests—the host receiving no benefit from the visit except the pleasure of his guests' company; it would be unjust to place upon him the burden of protecting his guests from all injury.

As it was put by one judge, the visitor in a home takes his host as he is and for the purpose of liability becomes a member of the host's family.

A different rule applies to persons who come on one's property for the purpose of a business in which the owner is engaged. Towards these persons the owner owes the duty of "reasonable care" for their safety.

Thus one who operates a store is liable to his customers for injuries they sustain as a result of his negligence. He must do what a reasonable man would do under the same circumstances to provide for the care and safety of these so call "invitees."

(Oregon lawyers offer this column as a public service. No person should apply or interpret any law without the volved. Even a slight variance aid of an attorney who is completely advised of the facts in fact may change the application of the law.)
