SALES TAX FACES MANY MORE HURDLES

If the Oregon House of Representatives gets its way, citizens will in less than three months get to vote on a state sales tax for the first time in 20 years.

That body Thursday voted 33-27 to refer a three per cent retail sales tax bill to the people at a special June 20 election. The bill is at the core of a six-point tax reform package approved by the House in March's final hours.

In the Republican controlled House, Democrats generally prefer Gov. Tom McCall's plan to offset local property taxes through income tax increases. There still is doubt whether the Senate will concur with the House vote; if it does, it may well move the voting date ahead to 1968.

Rep. Joe Rogers (R-Independence), chief proponent of the approved sales tax measure, made it clear in his floor presentation that it is intended to provide massive property tax relief.

"It is an answer to the 1 1/2 percent limitation people," he said. He noted that after administrative costs and discounts to retailers for their collection costs, his bill will raise $119.5 million annually for the state.

"By strange coincidence, this is approximately the same amount of revenue which would have been lost if the 1 1/2 percent limitation had passed," Rep. Rogers said.

Five other elements of the tax reform package built around a state sales tax were approved in a full day of House debate:

1. An approximate 15 per cent increase in corporation spending a month at Mesa, Ariz. Enroute to Mesa they visited in Fresno, Calif., at the home of Mrs. Golda Brassfield and Bob. The Brassfields owned and operated a grocery store for some time at Lyons.
2. Mr. and Mrs. Jock Reisterer and four children, from Scappoose were Sunday guests at the home of his cousin Leiland Manning and family.
3. Mr. and Mrs. Steve Phillippi who have been living in a trailer house on Franklin street have moved to Salem.

taxes, planned to raise $6 million a year.

2. New formula for providing state aid to local schools, effecting property tax cuts by using sales tax revenue to raise basic school support from 29 per cent to almost 75 per cent in 1968-69. School districts, in turn, would be limited in amounts of local taxes they could levy, to ensure permanent relief via state aid.
3. Revised state personal income tax form, in effect eliminating the federal tax deduction—but rate changes would keep the total state tax yield the same.
4. Setting of June 20 as the special election date and appropriating $300,000 for election expenses.
5. Appropriation of $3 million to administer the sales tax.

Although House passage would seem to wrap up the package nicely, several more hurdles will have to be overcome before Oregon joins the other 42 sales tax states. Senate amendments are a certainty, for example, and any sales tax proposal which may pass that body will then have to go to a conference committee.

Then there is the question of gaining voter approval. Time and time again this legislature has stressed the theme that the state has enough revenue to operate at existing and even accelerated levels, that any "new" taxes will be aimed purely at satisfying public demands for local tax relief.

"This bill does not propose a vote on a sales tax," Rep. Rogers told his House colleagues last week. "It provides for a vote on a Constitutional amendment, on limitation to make responsible voters solve their own tax reform problems."

Sales tax proponents argue that it would take a 68 per cent increase in personal income taxes to achieve equal property tax reductions, of about 37 per cent. They point out that 95 per cent of all Americans now are subject to sales taxes. Modeling their bill after the 34-year-old California sales tax, they exempt food consumed off-premises and prescription drugs, thereby removing some objection
