State Allows Log Trucks to Haul Sat. Afternoons

To facilitate the salvage and removal of timber from the Ox Bow Burn, the scene of a series of devastating forest fires, the Oregon State Highway commission today approved a resolution authorizing the moving of timber over State Highways on Saturday afternoons during the period August 17 through September 7.

Several additional fires and the policy of ceasing work in the timber area when the humidity reaches 35 rather than the normal level of 30 has slowed the clean-up work.

The major Ox Bow fire, which is in the vicinity of Drain and Divide, took place in 1965. Present State law prevents the moving of timber on State Highways on weekends after 12 noon on Saturdays during the period May 23 to September 8.

Rain Better'n Hot Weather Says Weatherman

DETROIT—This years unseasonal down pour of rain is a wet and welcome contrast to a year ago when all of Oregon was "sweating out" the worst drought in the state's history.

A total of 3.25 inches of rain has fallen in the area this month according to weatherman, Joe Muise, with the greatest amount in a 24 hour period recorded as .75 of an inch August 19th.

Snow fell at the 7,000 foot level Friday and Saturday. Three Fingered Jack, a 7,793 foot pinnacle Southeast of here in the Cascades was whitened by snow.

A spokesman at the Ranger Station said Monday the rain has eased the fire danger considerably.
