

LYONS

By Eva Bressler

Our Hippies have moved away. We are not sure if our loss is Scio's gain or not. There was much publicity about our neighbors, however we can not complain, as they attended strictly to their own business paid their bills and were always pleasant. Their way of life is not our way of life and their back ground has been much different. We wonder if many parents aren't much concerned after raising these young people to be so different, than the way they are living.

Bumper Cone Crop Slated For Harvest; Tips Given

From now through October, many people will help to harvest the second bumper cone crop in three years. During a peak year, cone picking provides a healthy income for experienced pickers since a continuing need exists for good seed. There is plenty of room for everyone to pick cones, but since most cone picking takes place on private land, a few precautions need to be observed.

First, pickers should take the time to get permission before picking on private land. Trespassing is illegal. That notwithstanding, simple courtesy requires that pickers let the landowner know who is on his land. Most timber owners do not object to picking on their property, and they may even be able to suggest the best spots. Some charge a small entry fee. Be sure to close gates and park where you will not interfere with other traffic.

Picking on state-owned lands requires permission from the District Warden or District Administrator. In some cases the area where picking may be done is specified to help control genetic characteristics of the seed. The U. S. Forest Service requires permits and makes a nominal charge for cones picked in the National Forests. Application for these permits should be made to the District Ranger. Application permits to pick cones on other public lands should be made to the local administrator.

Carelessness sometimes causes damage to timber stands which guarantees an icy reception on a return trip or for the next unfortunate picker. Most damage occurs when climbers break the tops out of trees, cut off green limbs, or girdle the trunks with ropes. In a few cases pickers have cut the entire tree down in order to leisurely gather cones on the ground. State laws proved penalties for cutting or damaging trees owned by someone else.

Since cone picking season comes when fire danger is often at its highest, it is imperative that everyone cooperate with forest management and fire prevention people. Pickers should check for closures and get permits where required before departing to the woods.

Someone has come up with a few guidelines for cone pickers which we pass on here:

1. Thou shalt consult thy local buyer of cones, thus to save thyself from labor of no profit, for he can tell the whereabouts of cones worth his gold.
2. Thou shalt seek the best place to pick for it profits least to gather cones where they aboundeth not.
3. Though shalt secure the forest owners permission lest he dust thy breeches with number six chilled.
4. Thou shalt know thy fire regulations, be aware of regions not open, and secure permits where so decreed.
5. Thou shalt test thy cones before picking lest seed be scarce or unripe.
6. Thou shalt use the right equipment, lessening toil and increasing safety.
7. Thou shalt harvest in the manner best suited to the region and the tree, thus working least and reaping most.
8. Thou shalt deliver the harvest of thy labors to the buyer daily, lest he find your cones spoilt and unfit, and he buyeth them not.
9. Thou shalt use care in harvesting cones lest tree damage result. The landowner taketh a dim view and vent much wrath upon the knave who harmeth his forest.
10. Thou shalt not bear false witness to the cone buyer, telling him the untrue whereabouts of the cones thou hast picked, for in so doing, thou renderest a foul blow against thy children, the inheritors of the forests.

Further information is available in a bulletin, "Collecting Forest Seed Cones in the Pacific Northwest" which may be obtained free of charge from your local Farm Forester, County Extension Agent, or the U. S. Forest Service, Box 3623, Portland, Oregon 97208.
