IT'S YOUR LAW

Respect for Law Makes Democracy Live How can an inventor best protect his invention or idea?
This problem arises every time a basement mechanic or a research scientist finds he has made an important discovery in the industrial or other practical fields in which our patent laws grant protection.

Since questions may arise as to who was first with the idea, the inventor should take early steps to insure he can prove when he conceived his idea.
A commonly-held, false belief is that an inventor can prove the date of his invention by his own written description which he has mailed to himself by registered mail. As legal proof this form of evidence is of little value. An inventor cannot prove facts in a patent contest without corroborating proof furnished by an outside party.

The inventor who has never revealed his invention to anyone else has no satisfactory proof of invention. Keeping it secret from any corroborating witnesses is one of the surest ways to jeopardize an invention.

At the earliest possible time the inventor should fully disclose his idea to one or two reliable persons who would be good witnesses at a later date.
Each of these persons should sign and date a written description of the idea. All sketches, drawings and photographs similarly should be dated and witnessed immediately. No nota-rization or other formality is necessary.

Original models should be preserved, plus correspondence, receipts for parts or labor used in developing the idea.
In this manner an inventor can build a record of proof which will be available and admissible in the event someone contests his right to the patent.

After the inventor has conceived his idea, he should act reasonably diligently to reduce the invention to practice. He can either construct an operable model of the invention or file a patent application in the U. S. Patent Office.

Because the expense of preparing and filing a patent application is substantial, it is often advisable to investigate carefully the commercial prospects of a new product or process before filing.
It is also advisable at this stage to have a novelty search performed with the assistance of a patent attorney or patent agent to determine whether the idea is really new or just a slight variation on what has

column as a public service.)
