Grant and Deyoe Spark Wolverine Win

Behind the one-hit pitching of Don Deyoe, and a grand slam homerun by Tony Grant, the Wolverines downed the JFK Trojans 6-1 in Monday's non-league action.

Grant's blast came in the first inning when lead-off man Leo Poole reached first on an error. Singles by Larry Hillesland and Allen Rains loaded the bases for the Wolverines, bringing Grant up next. With a full count, Tony hit one over the left fielder's head and raced around the bases for his first grand slam of the year, which put the Wolverines out in front 4-0.

The Wolverines scored again in the 4th inning when Gordon Plotts singled, stole second, and came around to score when Pitcher Don Deyoe doubled to right.

The final run for Santiam came in the sixth inning when Plotts, again leading off, singled to left, and advanced to second on a bad throw by the second baseman. Jerald Sarff walke putting runners on first and third. When Sarff attempted to steal, the catcher threw the ball to second, allowing Plotts to come across and score once more for the Wolverines.

Logger Escapes River With His Life

Jean Roberts

MEHAMA — Very few people who go to a lumber yard to buy a sheet of plywood, read the daily paper, or slip their groceries into a paper bag, realize the hazards involved to produce these commonly known wood items. Logging, the biggest industry in the state of Oregon and the least well known, is essential to produce these wood products and will perhaps prove more hazardous this year than in previous years, because of the deep snow.

One logger barely escaped with his life this week, Bud Johnson of North Santiam Cutters Inc., after rowing two "fallers" across the swollen Little North Fork to cut "right-of-way" for a new road. Coming back across the raging river, deepened by melting snow, Bud was crossing hand over hand on a rope tied across the river when the torrent swept his boat out from under him and left him fighting for his life hanging on to the rope.

The "cutters" are always the first to enter a new strip of timber as right-of-way must be cut for a road before the road can be built and the timber logged. Since this road parallels the river the shortest way across was by boat; Bud lost his boat, but managed to save his life.

It was near this same spot several years ago that a miner was drowned trying to cross the river on a raft tied to a rope in much the same manner as Johnson.

The Little North Fork water is clear and therefore deceptive when swollen by melting snow. "When the ripples disappear," old timers say, "it isn't safe to cross."

Traffic Accidents Take Young Lives

President of his student body, he was looking forward to June graduation, then to starting college. It was Sunday morning and the beginning of a three-day vacation. Then... his car missed a turn. Five high school students were driving along the freeway, laughing and chatting. Returning from the state basketball tournament, they may have been discussing next season's team prospects. So young, with such promising futures. Then... four of them were dead.

They were among the 35 Oregon traffic crashes in young persons who died in March. Over half of the 69 March fatalities were 21 or younger. One was only eight months.

"Traffic fatality statistics are too often dismissed as cold, inhuman numbers," Gov Tom McCall, Oregon Traffic Safety Commission chairman, declared. "In reality, each one represents a family tragedy. The needless deaths of youngsters, with so much of life ahead of them, is shameful.

"More important," McCall emphasized, "most deaths could be prevented by simple, logical precautions. Fastening a safety belt, using restraining devices for small children, driving at sensible speeds, obeying traffic laws, driving defensively and courteously—these actions prevent crashes and save lives.

"The tragedy of March underlines the critical need for a comprehensive program of driver education to equip our youth for safer driving," the Governor said.

The March total of 69 fatalities represents a 38 percent increase over 50 in March 1968. The 1969 total through March stands at 147, an increase of 10.5 per cent over 133 recorded during the same period in 1968.

Ten of the month's traffic fatalities occurred in Jackson County, eight in Linn, seven in Clackamas and six in Douglas.

Five pedestrians died in March. One fatality resulted from a car-train crash. At least six victims were not wearing safety belts. In one instance, two companions in one safety belt crashed into a house 88 feet from the roadway.
