Dame Rumor has it that one of the old landmarks in Mill City is soon to fall by the wayside. I am referring to the Old Hammond Hall, as it is known by old timers here. Way back when—it was the town gathering place with old-fashioned family Thanksgiving dinners held there, "The Company" furnishing the turkeys and baskets of other goodies were brought by those attending.

Then too, it was the site of the old silent films back in the 20's with Andy Holthouse or Mrs. Kahler really tickling the ivories as only they could do it.

We used to have our high school "basket ball dinners" there following all the games with out-of-town teams. The girls furnished the refreshments and we all sat at the long tables in the dining room and a good many romances, light and otherwise, started there. There is one mild flirtation that I always remember.

It was one night when we played the State School for the Deaf and I had quite a "conversation" with one of the mutes. Much to my surprise when I came home from school one evening the next week there he was on my front door step, notebook in hand. I can still remember my mother's look as she wondered what her shy(?) little daughter had been up to. Well, that was a short romance.

Then during the depression years a number of activities went on in the upstairs, dancing, bowling, parties. During all of this time a pool hall was housed downstairs on one side. Then came drug stores, restaurants, meat markets, taverns, barber shops—and now only Hill Insurance Agency remains which is soon to move into new quarters.

It may be only an eyesore to many people—but to those of us that have lived through many wonderful times in the building—it is with a feeling of fond nostalgia that we know it must go.

But such is progress, down with the old and on with the new.
