Eagles Seen In Upper Canyon Area; Their Heritage Reviewed

By Boots Champion
DETROIT — Eagles have been sighted by several people recently in the South Blow-out area. These have been reported to be young birds, and are presumed to be bald eagles, since the bald eagle has been previously sighted in that area, as well as in the Boulder Ridge area, in recent years.

According to Funk & Wagnalls Encyclopedia, Eagle, is a common name for a number of the largest members of the hawk family in the order Falconiformes. The term is loosely used; some buzzards of the same family and some hawks are larger than the smaller eagles. Like other members of the hawk family, the eagle is characterized by a hooked beak, and by well developed legs and feet with the toes equipped with long curved talons. Its keenness of vision and the strength which it displays in flight are remarkable. The bird soars to great heights, from which it swoops down suddenly to seize its prey either in the air or on the ground.

From ancient times the eagle has been regarded as a symbol of courage and power because of the attitudes to which it flies, because of the great size of the larger species, and because of the inaccessibility of the mountain heights in which some species nest.

The sea eagles or ernes inhabit coastal regions and the shores of lakes and streams, and live mainly on fish. One of these is the bald eagle, also known as the American eagle. By an act of the Second Continental Congress in 1782 it became the official emblem of the United States. The subspecies, or southern bald eagle, has a range extending from southern Canada into Central Mexico. This bird is about the size of the golden eagle. The female, slightly larger than the male, attains a wingspread of seven and one-half feet. The northern bald eagle, is a larger subspecies widely distributed in Alaska and Canada.

Winter migrations bring it into the northern part of the United States, sometimes as far south as Connecticut, according to the Encyclopedia. The bald eagle migrates only from the coldest section of its range. The bird is not bald, but when three years old develops white feathers on the head and neck, and also a white tail, contrasting with the rest of its plumage, which is blackish brown. The young are entirely dark. Unlike the golden eagle, the bald eagle has no feathers on the lower legs. Compared to other eagles, the bald eagle is clumsy and inexperienced in hunting and fishing. It depends heavily on injured or dead fish cast up by whirlpools or tides. It also steals from the Osprey when the smaller bird has caught a live fish. He will attack the Osprey in the air, tormenting it until the Osprey drops the fish, which the eagle catches in the air.

The bald eagle's nest often is built in the top of a tall, dead tree. A pair of birds may use the same nest year after year.

Because of the scarcity of these birds in the United States people are being asked not to shoot them, especially the young of the eagle which are not usually recognized because of the dark color.

Some other interesting facts the Encyclopedia disclosed was the eagle gold coin of the United States in value of ten dollars, so called because it bore a representation of a bald eagle, the U. S. emblem. The coin was first minted in 1795 in accordance with the laws, enacted by Congress in 1792, establishing the coinage system of the United States. Half eagles, or five dollar gold pieces were also minted for the first time in 1795. Quarter eagles were coined from 1796 to 1931. A single double eagle, now in the collection of the U. S. Mint, was coined in 1849. Double eagles were first coined for issues in 1850. After passage of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, the Federal government withdrew all gold coins, including eagles, half eagles, and double eagles from circulation, and the minting of gold coins was discontinued.

Small Opening Day Crowd of Anglers At Detroit Lake

DETROIT—Saturday, fishing season opened officially. It was a cold, wet blustery day, but it did not seem to dampen the spirits of hundreds of fishermen who flocked to the area to wet their lines. Bank fishing was much in evidence, while others launched their boats at Mongold, the only public boat ramp available due to the low water level in the Reservoir. For Detroit Lake resort and Slayden's resort on the Breitenbush arm of the lake, the low water presented a greater than usual problem. It was necessary to drag the rental boats across the marina area's to the waters edge.

Angler numbers appeared to be much lower at popular Detroit Reservoir than have been counted in previous years at the opening of trout season. For most the catch was generally considered poor.

Most business establishments did a brisk business however, especially on Saturday. Detroit Lake State Park with some 236 camp-sites was reported to have been far from being filled to its capacity.

There were only four U. S. Forest Service campgrounds open for the week-end. These were Hoover, South Shore, Upper Arm and Plety Island. Even these still had some snow. All other Forest Service campgrounds in the District were still closed with from one to three feet of snow on the grounds, forester Al Gardner said.

Sunday was sunny and a much warmer day than Saturday. There were still a lot of people around, who appeared to be enjoying their week-end outing in spite of the blustery conditions Saturday.

A spokesman at the Ranger Station said Monday Whispering Falls Campground will be open by Wednesday. There will be no charge on any of the camp grounds until after the first of May.

Gun Ammo May Now Be Purchased With Proper ID

Hunters and sportsmen need only identify themselves to be able to purchase ammunition under the 1968 Federal gun control law, the Internal Revenue Service said Friday.

There are no forms to fill out, but a person must show some identification such as a driver's license to indicate he meets the age requirements set forth in the gun law.

The 1968 Gun Control Act limits the sale of ammunition for pistols, revolvers and other handguns to persons 21 years of age and over. Ammunition for rifles and shotguns may be purchased by persons 18 years of age and over.
