Oktoberfest Slated for Sept. 18 At Mt. Angel

MT. ANGEL, Ore.—Mt. Angel's Oktoberfest, the state's fastest growing celebration, opens Sept. 18 with four days of festivities with a Bavarian flavor planned.

The festival, patterned after the world-famed Oktoberfest of Munich, Germany, will feature cultural, sports and variety events. More than 135,000 persons were at last year's celebration.

Alpine and Bavarian-style booths manned by area civic organizations will be in operation on three downtown streets. Visitors will be able to stroll through the mall area where German foods and concessions will offer everything from apple strudel to hand-made pottery.

Strolling musicians will entertain the crowds as they walk along the streets playing accordions and singing. The Bavarian Dancers of Portland will perform all four days of the Oktoberfest.

The festival's popular beer garden, twice the size of past years, will be located in a converted warehouse and in a large tent next to it.

Work Smarter . . . Not Harder

By Bernice Strawa

It's time to think about back to school clothes. Parents shouldn't forget to teach their clothes-hungry teenagers that there's also upkeep cost.

On some "dry-clean only" garments, upkeep cost can be terrific. A good example might be a white wool skirt. If youngsters are made aware of these added costs, perhaps they will be more shrewd when they buy.

Money can be saved by switching color choices, looking for washable items, or color keying their clothes so they can all go in the same cleaner load.

We still get many questions about biodegradable detergents. For the past four years all of the major detergents as well as numerous others have been biodegradable.

The label usually does not use the term "biodegradable" by mutual agreement of the manufacturers. This didn't seem necessary since all the products were to have this characteristic.

Biodegradable means that the residue will be broken down in sewage treatment, thereby eliminating the problem of excess foam in waste water.

Don't mar the fun of summer picnics by risky food handling. So-called "food poisoning" may result from foods carried on outings without proper refrigeration.

To be sure you understand how to protect your family from illness caused by harmful bacteria in food, ask your county Extension office for a free bulletin, "Keeping Food Safe to Eat."

Storing Ice Cream—
Ice cream is on most home-maker's shopping lists these warm summer days. However, the quantity to buy may be limited by home freezer facilities.

A carton of ice cream can be stored for two to three weeks in the freezing compartment of a refrigerator-freezer combination model, or for one to two months in a home freezer at a constant temperature of 0° F. or lower. Ice cream should not be allowed to partially melt and then be re-hardened. Texture will be coarse and grainy and the product will develop undesirable ice crystals.

Give Your Child a Good Start in School—

One of the most important gifts you can give your child as he starts to school this fall is a feeling of self-confidence.

By the time he's old enough for school he has developed a basic feeling about himself but, you can add to his self-confidence by play acting some of the situations he'll meet at school, and talking about others.

If he's going to walk to school, walk with him several times pointing out familiar landmarks so that he has complete confidence in his ability to get home safely. Then, let him practice making the walk until he can do it with confidence.

If he doesn't know other children who will be in his room, arrange for him to play with at least one or two children who will be in his room. If he hasn't been away from home for a day, work out some arrangements so he can try his wings.

Be sure that he knows his name, telephone number and address. He should also know where mother or daddy works and the last names of some other friends and relatives. Again mother can pretend she is the teacher or the principal and act out situations.

Now is a good time to consider the impressions you've been giving at home about the teacher and what he will do at school. Send him to school with the idea that his teacher will be nice, likes children, and wants to help him learn.

As school approaches, parents need to be alert to concerns that children express either through their questions or as they play and talk with other children.

What a child expects of school and the people he will meet affects the climate for learning.

Starting school is a big step in a child's life. It deserves some special thought.

Light makes a difference

Warmth radiated by this family room is due largely to the blending of lighting techniques. Recessed fixtures furnish even general lighting. Wall lighting emphasizes the architectural decorative and personal touches. Portable lamps round out the lighting scheme.

One basic rule to remember about lighting the family room: it must be kept flexible. It should have ample lighting for reading, playing games or sewing, and at the same time be capable of changing to a lower-key type of lighting for TV watching or conversation.

Luminous ceiling panels or well-shielded fluorescent fixtures provide sufficient lighting for most activities, but the family room can use other lighting systems to supplement varying situations requiring a higher concentration of light in a specific area or a subdued general lighting level.

Downlighting is used to direct light on horizontal surfaces, such as the floor or tables, without making the room appear unduly bright. It is done best with incandescent reflector spot and flood lights in either recessed or surface-mounted ceiling fixtures. The effect is dramatic, and should be coordinated with other lighting systems in the room.

A brick or textured wall, such as a fireplace, can be lighted with spotlights, recessed in or mounted on the ceiling as close to the wall as possible. These will light the wall from a grazing angle and enhance the texture through highlights and shadows.

Peterson Return From Alaskan Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Peterson returned this week from a three week trip to Alaska, driving up the Alcan highway and returning by boat. "Pete" said they had a wonderful time but that he wouldn't care to drive again but thought the boat trip back was great.

He called the scenery in Alaska fantastic and said the economy there seemed to be tremendous with all the stores, banks and other places of business lined with customers. Mr. Peterson said most everyone there made extremely high wages and prices were not all out of line accordingly.

The Petersons were favorably impressed with Anchorage, saying it was a beautiful city.

While eating in a restaurant there they ran across two or three people that had lived in Mill City, including Lindsay Davenport.

Making the trip with the Petersons were Mr. and Mrs. Art Ovilla of Portland and they made their headquarters at the home of his brother near Whitehorse.

CAN RELIGIOUS FAITH PREVENT A DIVORCE?
Mary was a member of a church which did not believe in sanction divorces. At the time John married her, he joined her church and agreed in writing to raise any child or children they might have in her faith.

After several years of marriage, John quit going to church and announced that he didn't care whether their first child was raised in her faith or not. Several years later John became enamored of another woman and moved out of his home, asking Mary to give him a divorce.

She refused, and told him, "You will never be able to get a divorce because I won't agree to it. No court is going to give you a divorce when it will violate my religious rights to let you have a divorce."

The next year John sued her for divorce, charging that she was indifferent to him, had been guilty of personal indignities rendering his life burdensome and refused to live with him as his wife.

Do you think Mary can prevent John from getting a divorce because her religious views would be violated by the divorce?

The answer is that the fact that Mary is a member of a religious faith which does not approve of divorce cannot prevent her husband from getting a divorce. However, in this case she might well be able to prevent him from getting a divorce by going to court and showing that the breakup of the marriage was caused by his infatuation with another woman, and not by any breach of the marriage vows by Mary.

Neither a husband nor a wife is entitled to a divorce from his or her mate for no other reason than that he or she has found another person that the erring mate would prefer to marry. If a husband or wife is trying to get a divorce when the other party to the marriage is the one who is blameless, the divorce may well be denied if the case is fought on court, instead of being allowed to go by default.

Potluck Planned for Former Detroit Dam Workers

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Fritts of Newport have contacted Mr. and Mrs. Byron Davis who live at the site of the Gates Air port and are asking them to get word to former workers on the Detroit Dam project of some 26 years ago.

The group of workers want to get the "old gang" together for a potluck at Fishermen's Bend park on Saturday, September 13 at the Cottonwoods shelter. The days festivities and time of reminiscing will start at 1 p. m. with those attending to bring a dish of potluck. Coffee will be furnished.

Mrs. Davis said there were a number of their friends and co-workers that they had not been able to locate and said that she hoped an article in The Enterprise would reach most of them.
