STRIKING CONTRAST — The natural splendor of the Horseshoe Falls at Niagara Falls stands in dramatic contrast to the craggy precipice of the American Falls, which was stilled temporarily on June 12. The dewatering will permit a six-month study by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in an effort to halt the erosion that has allowed the rocks to pile up at the base of the cataract.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Don Moffatt Editor, Mill City Enterprise Mill City, Oregon 97360 Dear Sir:

Just received the February 19 issue of The Enterprise and read with great interest your column on Dr. Buechel at the University of Seattle. I am familiar with similar occurrences in which professors would have been more than justified in the ejection of students, however, the idea of what is and what is not "university business" bothers me. To say that the Chicago Seven trial and the war in Vietnam should not have been brought up in any classroom is to say that newspapers and magazines should be banned from the campus, because surely what is read by students will be discussed with others and where else do you meet as great a collection of debaters as in the classroom.

Many professors have much to add that students would not gain from the viewpoints of their classmates, for people of different ages and backgrounds form different opinions. This "other side of the story" is necessary to balance the thoughts of both students and professors. My American Problems class at Santiam High, directed but not dictated by a man the age of my parents, discussed the war in Vietnam, the draft, blacks in America, and other problems that are or soon will be facing us. What is "high school business"? Any basic economics course has to deal with these problems, also.

In these classes the opinions of dissenters are welcome because we all should be "dissenters with world problems." If there are no dissenters (dissent being "to disagree or to differ in opinion or doctrine") then one can safely assume that all are happy with the present world condition and that no change is necessary. Wouldn't you like to see a few major problems solved? Young adults attend universities to learn historical and technical knowledge, but they should also learn more about what they are or will be facing off the campus. "Hooray" for professors like Buechel, when such action is required, but those who are simply crusading to change all the students of the world are cutting off an avenue of hope and perhaps, salvation.

Respectfully yours, Alan Yankus

TO THE EDITOR:

Was interested in reading your column last week (and every week) attacking the problems of litter and pollution. Recently heard Tom E. Nelson, Environmental Biologist for Wah Chang Corp. of Albany who stated that it is "technically possible right now to have a clean healthful environment." He stressed that it was up to each community to decide how clean they want their air, their water, their highways and then do something about it.

So the next question is what do I do? At present we have one pollution authority which is five county wide and consists of Marion, Linn, Polk, Benton, and Yamhill counties with the authority vested in one commissioner in each county. This board of directors would like to hear from the people expressing their wishes concerning pollution and what they (the people) want done about it. They suggest petitions.

A number of industries are slowly adopting anti-pollution measures but the speed with which these measures are adopted is up to this pollution authority which will act only upon demand by the citizenry. (Most industries will cooperate but they want pollution control fairly enforced since it is unfair competition if one is required to clean up and another is not).

If highway pollution is the biggest problem in our area, write to your State legislators. Urge them to legislate returnable bottles. This will eliminate most of the roadside litter. It also should help stem inflation since the disposable bottles cost more. Urge your congressman to enact laws to recycle products which will aid in the disposal problem and also conserve our natural resources. Newspapers can be collected and reused (this is done other places). Tires could be recycled and reused (they were in the last war) it is possible to buy unleaded gas to cut down on automobile exhaust pollution. Begin in your own community and then expand. More Home Delivery Due Mail Patrons

Postmaster Charles Kelly said today that a new order from Postmaster General Winston M. Blount will mean substantial improvements in mail delivery service. Blount has advised the local postmasters of provisions of a new order making home delivery services available for the first time to four million Americans.

The service improvement applies to persons served out of 18,700 first, second and third class post offices over the country that do not have city delivery services. Affected are those postal customers living more than a quarter mile away from these offices and less than half a mile away. Persons living less than half a mile away previously had not been provided this service. Discussing the local area effects of Mr. Blount's new order, Postmaster Kelly explained: "To get the new service it is only necessary that those living in the eligible areas ask their postmasters to provide it, and a majority of those to be served must want the home service." Under Blount's order, those living less than a quarter mile from the post office will continue to pick up their mail at these offices. This order, however, will make the home deliveries available wherever desired by the majority of those living beyond a quarter mile.

The expansion of services should be virtually complete in all of the affected delivery service areas—under actions taken by postal regional offices, acting on recommendations of local postmaster by February 1, 1971.

It will be accomplished principally by adding delivery stops to already existing rural delivery routes, or by expanding the area served by some shorter rural route for the purpose, and, a limited number of new rural routes may also be needed in other instances.

The fact that fewer persons will be calling at post offices for their mail will not alter the independent status of any of the post offices where the service change is provided.
