New Law Encourages Campaign Contributions

Despite the speed with which modern technology produces voting results, we won't know how the outcome of one 1970 election issue until after April 15, 1971.

Computerized ballot tabulation, voting machines and percentage predictions can't hurry the process either. The issue already is developing and directly involves both this year's primary and general elections.

It's the brain-child of Sec. of State Clay Myers—a first in the United States, and designed to broaden the base of political activity by tax-paying Oregon residents. It also is designed to help overcome the rapidly soaring costs of campaigning in today's age of instant communication.

It is the result of Myers' House Bill 1572 enacted by the 55th Legislative Assembly in 1969 and now known as ORS 316.102, which reads:

"Credit for political contributions. (1) A credit against taxes shall be allowed for contributions made in the taxable year to political parties and their candidates whose names are listed on official ballots in any election held in Oregon. A like credit shall be allowed for contributions made to committees organized in support of or in opposition to ballot measures or questions. The credit shall equal the least amount of the following:

"(a) The total amount contributed.

"(b) 50 per cent of the total contribution for a maximum of $5 on a separate return; 50 per cent of the total contribution for a maximum of $10 on a joint return.

"(c) The tax liability of the taxpayers.

"Tax claim for tax credit shall be substantiated by submission, with the tax return, of official receipts of the candidates, agent, committee or association to whom contribution was made."

This permits a taxpayer to deduct from the state income tax he otherwise would pay for 1970 and afterward, 50 per cent of his qualifying political contributions up to a maximum of $65. A husband and wife filing a joint return could claim a credit of up to $10.

Some states, according to Myers, have discussed making political contributions "deductible" from gross income. But Oregon is the first state to grant a direct tax credit.

"We would repeat our purpose by going the deduction route," explained Myers. "The small contributor would not benefit sufficiently if contributions were deductible. And this measure is aimed at making it more attractive for the relatively low income groups to become politically active as campaign supporters."

There's little doubt the new law will accomplish its purpose. How effectively it does the job remains to be seen. An attorney general's opinion already has ruled out contributions to "political action" committees collecting funds for unspecified candidates or measures.

And Myers is disappointed the law's language apparently exempts contributions to non-partisan positions, such as superintendent of public instruction and the judiciary.

"Hopefully, this situation can be remedied by the 56th Legislative Assembly," he said.

The Secretary of State also would like to increase the size of the tax credit. His original bill called for a maximum credit of $50 instead of $10 for a husband and wife jointly.

Budget-conscious Legislators—concerned about the potential drain on state revenues, pared down the request until they get a chance to see its effect on tax receipts.

Oregon collects something like $100 million in income tax each year. Myers guesses the new law will have a "minimal" effect this year, resulting in statewide credits of maybe $100,000.

For candidates and campaign fund raisers the new law is a shot in the arm at a time when campaign costs are mounting and the economy tends to discourage contributions. But in the long run it is part of a six-point attack Myers is aiming at Oregon electioneering.

Two others already are being considered by the Elections Subcommittee of the Interim Committee on Rules and Resolutions. They involve pre-election reporting of campaign expenditures and the single campaign treasurer concept. Other Myers goals include limiting individual contributions to amount equal to what a candidate is permitted to spend in his own behalf, a long-arm statute that would tend to control out-of-state contributions and an audit staff that would enable the Secretary of State's office to more thoroughly examine campaign expenditures for possible discrepancies.

But these developments are somewhere in the future and the tax credit issue is a current reality. No one can accurately forecast public reaction to the new law in advance. But political scientists will have one more reason to keep an eye on Oregon when 1970 income taxes are filed next spring.

Idanha Residents Tour Europe

IDANHA—Returning home recently from an eight-day visit in Europe were Mr. and Mrs. Mel Round, Mr. and Mrs. Ferris Benton and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Stormer, all of Idanha. Round said his group was part of some 250 passengers on a Super DC 8 to the southern tip of Portugal and Algarf. He said they spent three days in Portugal, three days in Lisboa and one day in Spain.

He remarked that in Portugal people are still riding donkeys to peddle their fruit and vegetables, and that farmers are still using oxen to plow their fields. He said although people are about 50 years behind the times he noted cars in the cities, but most of them appeared to be taxis.

In Lisboa, he noted that the houses were of the 16th century type but that they were in good shape and added that some of them were six and seven stories high.

Weather conditions were good and all had a good time.
