MORE LABELING in coloring. Leading brands of detergents will soon be labeled nationally as to their phosphate content.
Manufacturers plan to label packages according to the percent of phosphorus in the product and also its equivalent by grams per recommended use. (You might as well start getting used to "grams" as someday we will be changing to the metric system.)
This may help correct misinformation about phosphate content of products which has appeared in many lists. It isn't the percent of phosphate that counts, it's how much you use. With some detergents you use more than others per load of clothes.
SAVE Freezer Space. When freezing a combination main dish, put it in a casserole lined with foil, suggests Mrs. Judith Forest, OSU Extension food specialist.
After freezing, lift the food from the dish and wrap for storage. This leaves your casserole free for other uses and freezes the main dish combination in a shape that can be stacked in the freezer. Return to the casserole for reheating later.
