LEGISLATIVE REPORT

Ken Jerstedt

As the debate on the tax plan drew to a close, many of the legislators were campaigning either for or against the tax measure. The actual pace of the legislature seemed to slow down, waiting for the outcome of the May 1 vote.

The legislature has now concluded its 16th week of meetings and deliberations on proposed legislation. Although we have been moving at a fairly constant pace, we still have a large number of bills in committee.

Some of the bills which were acted upon this week include a compromise version of a proposed comprehensive landlord-tenant bill which sets forth the rights of both landlords and tenants; a measure which will allow people who find money to keep all of it if it isn't claimed by the owner within a year; a measure to allow bars which serve only malt beverages and wine to have dancing and singing together with any number of instrumentalists.

The house has passed a measure which would give counties the power to make laws. The laws could be passed either by the county governing bodies or by the people themselves. Presently only five counties — Multnomah, Washington, Hood River, Lane and Benton—have law-making powers.

Ordinances which are passed by a county would be subject to the referendum process the same as on the state level.

There are still a great number of bills in committee and these are being scheduled for hearings in which you are welcome to testify. To obtain information on any bill that you are interested in, call Legislative Information, toll free, 1-800-452-0290.

If there is anything I can do for you while here in Salem, please feel free to write in care of the Oregon Senate, Salem, or call 378-8757.

Wilderness Permit System Modified

The U. S. Forest Service will continue its wilderness permit system this year in the Pacific Northwest.

Regional Forester Theodore A. Schlapfer said, however, the system will be modified somewhat from a year ago in that permits will be required in seven of the 14 designated wilderness areas within the national forests of Oregon and Washington.

Included in the system for 1973 will be the Eagle Cap, Mt. Jefferson and Three Sisters Wildernesses in Oregon; and Glacier Peak, Goat Rocks, Mt. Adams, and Pasayten Wildernesses in Washington. These, Schlapfer said, are the most heavily used, and are the largest areas with the most serious management problems.

Permits will be required for all visits to the Eagle Cap Wilderness. They will be required for overnight trips only to the Mt. Jefferson and Three Sisters Wildernesses and the four Washington Wilderness areas. Schlapfer said the past few months have been "a time of extensive debate and discussion over wilderness management and the permit system, both in the forest service and by the public. We tried to hear everyone who had something to say, and reach a decision as close as possible to the needs of both the wilderness and its visitors."

The permit system will be in effect from June 15 through the close of the big game hunting seasons (usually about Nov. 15). Permits will be issued in person and by mail by the forests where a wilderness is located, except where a popular wilderness portal is through an adjoining forest. Mail applications may be picked up at any forest service office.

Schapfer said the modified system hopefully will enable the forest service to better answer visitor questions and provide information about specific problems of the areas to be visited. He said, "this was impossible when permits were issued by another forest, as was the case in 1972."

In some instances, forest service offices along main travel routes to a wilderness will be open weekends and evenings during peak use periods.

Some specific restrictions about certain activities such as camping and use of pack and saddle stock apply to some areas. Information about these will be provided with the permits.
