It Ain't All Roses

(by George Long)

A few years ago, no one paid much attention to those who warned that such things as pollution control devices cost money and that there was no one to pay that cost but consumers. Now, on top of inflation, the bill for protecting the environment is coming due. The billions of dollars that industry has spent and is continuing to spend to comply with sometimes overly-stringent environmental protection measures is beginning to be reflected in the prices of everything we buy, from food, clothing and housing to electric power.

Electric companies, for example, are paying for expensive low-sulphur coal and smoke emission controls for generating plants. This means inescapably higher rates to customers. Many of the utility industry's customers are companies that must, in turn, use large quantities of energy to operate their own pollution control systems. According to recent figures, more than 2,100 individual large customers of electric utilities in 1971 required 8.1 billion kilowatt-hours of electric power to operate environmental protection and pollution control devices. Environmental protection is expected to represent about 10 percent of these industrial electrical power customers' annual requirements by 1977. These figures do not include energy which utilities require to operate their own pollution control equipment. And this is not all. Soaring energy demands, coupled with environmental requirements, call for heavy research and development expenditures by the electric industry.

Regulatory authorities ultimately will have no choice but to permit the passing on to customers in the form of higher rates the research, development and environmental expenses incurred by utility companies. Thus once again is proven the old adage that nothing in life is free, in fact pure air and water have become high-priced luxuries.

The parade will be judged at 11:20 a.m. and will follow the theme, "Take Time To". The youngsters will be lined up and judged at the parking lot of the Canyon Dental Clinic on First Ave. as there is more shade than in the former school parking lot. There will be four categories: bikes, trikes, walking and floats. All first prize winners will receive 75c; second prize 50c and third prize 25c. All entrants may use their tags to receive a free snow cone at the park.

Parents are asked to help small children in the proper line before judging time. The exact time of the judging will be published in The Enterprise once more before the fourth so that every youngster will have time to get in line for the prizes.

It was decided that a bicycle ride would be a good start to see how they liked group recreation. A dance and a day long hike are also being planned.

Many of the teenagers also volunteered to work on the Santiam Canyon Medical-Dental Health Fair, scheduled for July 13 and 14, a recycling project, and other programs. If anyone is interested in any recreation activities or other programs, would like to help out, or have any ideas, contact Steve Cahan at 897-3130, or leave a message at 897-2354.
