Nov. 4 Ends Most Park Camping

The overnight camping in the majority of Oregon's State Parks will end on Nov. 4, following a season which saw a slight drop in attendance, it was announced this week by David G. Talbot, superintendent of parks. The camping season usually extends from May through October, but weather can cause a variation in closing dates. This is especially true in the high altitudes of Central and Eastern Oregon where cold weather can make an earlier closing date advisable.

There are seven overnight camps which remain open throughout the year, with six of them located along the Oregon Coast and the other in southwestern Oregon 12 miles south of Grants Pass. These parks are Ft. Stevens, Cape Lookout, Beverly Beach, Jessie M. Honeyman, Bullards Beach, Harris Beach and Valley of the Rogue.

The figures for overnight camping use for the three popular vacation months of June, July and August showed an overall drop of 5.59% from the previous year. The figures for June show a drop of 3.86%, July down 6.7% and August down 5.5%.
