Pearl Harbor Attacked Dec. 7

This Friday, Dec. 7, Pearl Harbor Day, is a day many people won't forget. Early in the morning in 1941 the Japanese dealt a paralyzing blow to Pearl Harbor, a U. S. naval base on the southeastern coast of Oahu, Hawaii near Honolulu.

No one in high authority in Washington seems to have believed that the Japanese were either strong enough or foolhardy enough to lash out at Hawaii. However, while Tokyo was deliberately prolonging negotiations in Washington, Japanese bombers, winging in from distant aircraft carriers, attacked without warning on the "Black Sunday", morning of Dec. 7, 1941. It was a date, as President Roosevelt told Congress, "which will live in infamy". About three thousand casualties were inflicted on American personnel; many aircraft were destroyed; the battleship fleet was virtually immobilized; and numerous small vessels were damaged or destroyed. Fortunately, three priceless aircraft carriers happened to be outside the harbor.

The next day an angered Congress officially recognized the war that had been "thrust" upon the United States. The roll call in the senate lacked only one vote of unanimity. Germany and Italy, allies of Japan, spared Congress the agonizing indecision of a long debate by declaring war on Dec. 11, 1941. This challenge was formerly accepted on the same day by a unanimous vote of both Senate and House. The unofficial war, of many months' duration, was now official.
