"YOUR LAND AND MY LAND"

by Hazel Hayes

Timber Harvest—

Logging is a fascinating industry. Those great big trucks (the cost $40,000) loaded to 76,000 pounds gross, start going past our house at day-break. That means the drivers are up at 3 a. m. They snatch a breakfast somewhere along the way, arrive 'way up there on the side of a mountain, load up and come tearing down to the mill.

Some of the loads have beautiful logs—maybe only three huge ones per truck.

Jean and I stood on the curb waiting for such a truck to pass.

"I can't stand to see all those trees cut down. I don't even want to look at them," she said.

Here, all this time I had been enjoying and admiring them. I decided to investigate.

Karen's husband owns his own truck and she goes with him several times a week. She loves it up there in the mountains, especially when the sun comes up. The wild flowers are profuse and wild animals peek at them from the bushes.

Her husband is a steady, sturdy sort of person. When an emergency arises (and they do arise sometimes) he keeps his head.

Logging roads have contributed greatly to the protection of our forests. The network of roads makes it possible for the fire-fighters to reach almost any place where a fire might occur (nine of them started from lightning, night before last.)

The roads! Ah, the roads! Who builds them? Sometimes a logging company does it, always to certain rules and regulations. Sometimes the Forest Service builds them. Sometimes maybe even the loggers pitch in and help.

Perhaps we should talk about "Clear-cutting." Timber must be harvested before it gets over-ripe. By getting the mature trees off the land and reseeded and replanted, we can have a continuous growth of new timber. If the land is not cleared for the new little trees, the alders and other undesirable spring up quickly and crowd out the little lumberites.

Normal growing time for harvestable timber is about 100 years, roughly. But by present day methods and the development of new strands of timber, it is possible to shorten the time. Experimental forestry is the new thing. Trees from foreign countries are being tested.

If the Lumber Barons of the past had been as conscientious as the logging companies are today, there would never have been any talk of a shortage of timber.

Present methods assure a

You've Come a Long Way, America

Just one step in the early American method of soap making was rendering animal fat to mix with lye made from ashes, as shown in this picture taken at Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Michigan. In contrast to this arduous, but once-necessary task, the simple procedure of picking up a bar of soap at the local store is just one example of the dramatic changes in American life in the past 100 to 200 years.

This summer, the country's first major Bicentennial exhibition will be on display at the Henry Ford Museum at Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Michigan. Titled "Industrial Heritage U.S.A.," it has been developed by the Museum in commemoration of the American Bicentennial in cooperation with 26 outstanding industrial organizations. The exhibition illustrates the drastic changes in life style and points up the improved standard of living resulting from the evolution of American industry.

Individual exhibits trace the evolution of such diverse areas of American life as home entertainment, home lighting, the kitchen, the bath, farm equipment, clothing and electric power. Literally hundreds of artifacts have been selected for the exhibits from the vast collections of Greenfield Village and Henry Ford Museum to contrast the products of the past with those of today.

Overall, "Industrial Heriitage U.S.A." is an American history exhibit which will fill anyone who sees it with a feeling of admiration for the hardy individuals of the past and a sense of appreciation for the progress which has been made since our country's birth.

After Labor Day, the exhibition will begin an extensive tour of the country which will take it to every contiguous state in the Union by the end of 1976. But each summer, it will return to the Henry Ford Museum to be displayed during July and August among all the other collections which bring American history to life there.

continuing supply of forest products.

P. S. I asked many people, "Who pays for the logging roads?" Each one gave a different answer. The last one said, "In the final analysis, it's the taxpayers."

A telephone call from their daughter and son-in-law, the John Cloyds (Twylla Gooch), who are located in Kansas City, Mo., was also greatly appreciated.

Many at Ross Open House Sat.

About 150 people dropped by to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ross on their lovely new home during the calling hours Saturday afternoon and early evening. The beautiful weather added much to the occasion, with the river-front location being at its sparkling best, the guests enjoying the view from the spacious deck.

Answering the door was a nephew Daryl Ross of Stayton, with his wife, Tish, assisting with hostess honors. Preparation of the refreshments was ably handled by Mrs. George Davis and Mrs. Leo Poole.

The Rosses received numerous cards and gifts, many of the well-wishers coming from out-of-town.
