THE FAMILY LAWYER
G'f'ed Aliens
Our immigration laws, which set quotas for entry into the United States, also provide loopholes for special situations. One of these loopholes allows preferential visas for aliens who have "exceptional ability in the sciences or the arts."
What does this mean? Take the case of a woman golfer, born in Australia, who applied not long ago for a preferential visa.

Was her ability "exceptional"? Yes, ruled the Immigration Service, because as a professional competitor she had won many major tournaments. Was golf an "art"? Yes, ruled the service, because it provided entertainment for millions of spectators.
Result: the visa was granted. By similar reason, a preferential visa was granted to a brilliant Japanese puppeteer and a spell-binding Australian lecturer.
But the standards of excellence under this provision are high indeed.
Another case involved a Korean singer who was part of a duet. She was able to point to some favorable reviews by critics, but none that singled her out as an individual performer.
The immigration service decided that while she was doubtless capable as a vocalist, she was not "exceptional" enough to qualify for a preferential visa.
Furthermore, the skill itself must be one that is difficult to master. At one time or another, an Italian broommaker, an dan Italian hair stylist have all been turned down on the ground that their particular skill was too easily attainable.
As a commissioner explained in the broommaker case, he was not convinced that the services of the applicant "would be substantially beneficial to the national economy, cultural interest, or welfare of the United States."
