The newlyweds have gone to

The Least One Has A Place

Long Ago
Before the Universe had been shaped to God's plan
I was one of a myriad of stars—
The tiniest one,
Cupped in the hollow of the Master's hands,
They ran thru His fingers
like grains of sand,
To be disbursed in readiness
For all the World's delight.
I too, slipped from His fingers,
But seemed not to have a destiny.
I the tiniest star
Was lost.
Thru all the darkness I passed Thru the blackness of endless
nights,
Drifting aimlessly
Thru the millenniums of time,
Thru the maze of the universe
eternal;
Consumed by a haunting
hunger to belong.
Dazed Afraid
Bewildered,
There were no paths to follow
No sign to guide me.
What was God's plan for me?
Had he forgotten me, His least one?
Suddenly, speeding ever downward
I became aware of a dazzling glow of light
Coming from the East, Outshining all the other stars.
I approached
And to His beckoning ray, Amid sweet sounds of heavenly music,
The accompanying voices of celestial creatures, the Angels,
I came upon an infant
Lying in a manger.
In His hand
He held a wand.
I at last knew the purpose of my being.

I became the twinkle
On the tip of His scepter
Which he waves and blesses
In His love, all mankind
And every living creature.
—Evelyn Pfoertner.
