Conundrums.

The party who first sends to this office the correct answers to ten out of the fifteen following conundrums will get a six-month's subscription to The Examiner free of charge:

- What are the two best ships in the world?
- What time is it when the clock strikes 137?
- Why is a tin can tied to a dog's tail like death?
- Where was the witch of Endor born?
- What is that which gives a cold, cures a cold and pays the doctor's bill?
- How does Queen Victoria take her medicine?
- Why is a ship at sea like a diamond pin?
- What is the most unequal contest mentioned in the Bible?
- Why do we not want English duds in America?
- Why cannot President McKinley be buried in Trinity churchyard, New York?
- When is it easy to read in the woods?
- Why are the western prairies flat?
- Why is a washerwoman the greatest traveler on record?
- What is smaller than a gnat's mouth?
- If you throw a white stone into the Red Sea, what will it become?
- The correct answers to the above problems will be given in The Examiner of January 17, and any answers received will also be published.

N. C. O. Coupon Books.

The $50 money coupon books of the Nevada-California-Oregon Railway were placed on sale at the various ticket offices of the company January 1, 1901. Those books are unique in design and take the place of mileage books used by various railways, but, instead of a narrow slip for each mile, they contain a coupon for each five cents and the actual fare is detached by the conductor. As these books are sold at a discount of 20 per cent, it results in the passenger paying eighty cents on a dollar for the value of the coupons or forty dollars for each fifty-dollar coupon book and the books will not be confined to the use of a single person, but may be used for the members of a firm or their traveling men, or they may be used for a family to the extent of three persons, each of whom will be named on the back. These money coupons will also be accepted in payment of excess baggage at the face value of the coupons resulting in a saving to the holders of 20 per cent. Under these conditions we expect the money coupon books of the Nevada-California-Oregon Railway will become quite popular.

At Rest.

In a cemetery, near Portland, Maine, there are five tablets all alike except the inscriptions, which read:
 "Anna, the first wife of John Brown."
 "Mary, the second wife of John Brown."
 "Jane, the third wife of John Brown."
 "Clara, the fourth wife of John Brown."
 "John Brown. At rest at last."

In this vale of tears there are two classes of people who tend as largely to make life un-

The Wise Rich Man. bearable as any of the people one meets; they are on the one hand those who take life too seriously and on the other hand those who take it too flippantly, writes William Ellis in the Philosopher. As a matter of fact, life is neither a tragedy nor a joke. We are living because we must, and not because we choose to, and the wise man is he who gets the most out of it with the least cost to himself—he who comes the nearest to traveling intelligently, and by selection the path of least resistance. I met such a man the other day, and he was a source of great delight then, and ever since. There are so few who really know how to live. The strange part of the matter is that the man is rich. Now when it comes to getting something out of life, the rich man is badly handicapped. When you have only a five-dollar bill or less, there are so few things you can have that the possibilities of disappointment are reduced to a minimum. When you have a check book that you don't have to keep track on the stub of how much you have left in the bank, and look at it before you dare to draw an order for the payment of your gas bill, there are so many things you can select from that you have an immensely larger opportunity to make mistakes. But here is a man who seems to be happy, though rich, and I'd be glad to tell you his name, only I know he would be flooded with letters from people who want to know how—and then where would his vaunted happiness be? He works hard in his business, and makes money, and enjoys the making of it, but I judge that if his business did not make him happy—if he did not enjoy it—he would lock up his desk and throw the key away. That is, he stands rather as a happiness hunter than as a dollar chaser, even in his business. And when he shuts up his office at night and goes home he leaves all his business and its plans and problems behind him, with the elevator man or the janitor, where they ought to be, and he takes up his home life with just the same zest that he does his business life—and right there is where most men and many women fall down. He devotes himself to the pursuit of the elusive first edition—the rare etching—the unobtainable piece of china—the vintage that is long since out of the market—in short, all of the things that are worth having that are hard to get—and in the pleasure of acquirement, not by the mere specific gravity of a bank account, which nobody can prevent—but by the exercise of the craft and cunning of the chase—he more than doubles the value of possession. It is a rare life, and one to conjure with. For it pays in the dividends which can be put into the bank account, and pays in the greater dividends which can only be measured in that large content that only comes to the marooned or the victors. And then at the end of it all he can cook an egg on toast as nobody I ever saw can, except Jim Charles, and Jim Charles is a good deal such a good fellow, only Jim has no bank account. And after all, that makes a great difference—it's like an edged tool—a power in the hands of its master—a crime in hands that don't know how to use it.

Coal and wood will be superseded by electricity in the twentieth century kitchen. The electric oven bakes bread ideally, and meats prepared by it do not require watching or basting, while broiling or frying may be done in superior style. The electric chafing dish is attachable to an ordinary light wire; the current is turned and immediately the oysters begin to stew or the eggs to frizzle. In the electric kitchen there will be no coal, no ashes, no smoke, no fuel, and not even a battery.

"A man died in this city not long ago," remarked Robert M. Shearer at a Cincinnati hotel, "and left an old locked desk among his effects. The son could not open it, and proposed to sell the desk. His mother got into the desk while he was out and found certificates of stock in the Hecla copper mine of Michigan, which, with accrued value and dividends, netted the family $80,000. The stock, which may have been bought originally at $25 before the consolidation of the Hecla and Calumet, was worth $875 a share."

Two men from neighboring New Jersey towns met in a domino tournament last fall, and this contest was followed by a series of domino games between two teams from the towns, ten players being on a side. It is now reported that the two towns are domino crazy. Matches are held every week.
