

KILLING A MAN.

A Soldier Tells of one of the Things He Did on the Line of Duty.

[Detroit Free Press.]
Here is a brigade of us in battle line across an old meadow; our right and left join other brigades. We have thrown down the rail fence, gathered logs and brush and sod, and erected a breastwork. It is only a slight one, but enough to shelter us while lying down. A division of the enemy breaks cover half a mile away and comes marching down upon us.

They are going to charge us. Orders run along the line, and we are waiting until every bullet, no matter if fired by a soldier with his eyes shut, must hit a foe. I select my man while he is yet beyond range. I have eyes for no other. He is a tall, soldierly fellow, wearing the stripes of a sergeant. As he comes nearer I imagine that he is looking as fixedly at me as I am at him. I admire his coolness. He looks neither to the right nor to the left. The man on his right is hit and goes down, but he does not falter.

I am going to kill that man! I have a rest for my gun on the breastwork, and when the order comes to fire I cannot miss him. He is living his last minute on earth! We are calmly waiting until our volley shall prove a veritable flame of death. Now they close up the gaps and we can hear the shouts of their officers as they make ready to charge. My man is still opposite me. He still seems to be looking at me and no one else. I know the word is coming in a few seconds more, and I aim at his chest. I could almost be sure of hitting him with a stone when we get the word to fire. There is a billow of flame—a billow of smoke—a fierce crash—and 4000 bullets are fired into that compact mass of advancing men. Not one volley alone, though that worked horrible destruction, but another, and another, until there was no longer a living man to fire at.

The smoke drifts slowly away—men cheer and yell—we can see the meadow beyond heaped with dead and dying men. We advance our line. As we go forward I look for my victim. He is lying on his back, even half shut and fingers clutching at the grass. He gasps, draws up his legs and straightens them out again, and is dead as I pass on. I have killed my man! My bullet struck him, tearing that ghastly wound in his breast, and I am entitled to all the honor. Do I swing my cap and cheer? Do I point him out and expect to be congratulated? No! I have no cheers. I feel no elation. I feel that I murdered him, war or no war, and his agonized face will haunt me through all the years of my life.

Eleven to Thirteen Cents.

Mike Manning, of The Dalles, was in Fossil last week, says the Journal, when he purchased Rottier & Patterson's 1900 wool clip, almost 100,000 pounds, which has been in The Dalles about a year, at 11 1/2 cents per pound. He also purchased their clip this year, which was not then sheared, at the same price, and gave them a check as payment in full and an advance of several thousand dollars on the 1901 clip, which they delivered in The Dalles.

The wool clip in Benton County for this season is nearly all in the hands of the buyers, says the Corvallis Times. It is estimated that nine-tenths or more of it has been sold. In Corvallis 140,000 pounds have been bought, of which 75,000 have already been shipped. Only three or four lots still remain in the hands of the grower. The prices paid for the clip have been from 11 to 13 1/2 cents, the latter figure having been paid in but few instances. A buyer said yesterday that the average price in Corvallis through the season had been about 12 1/2 cents. A large quantity of wool has been marketed at Monroe, but of the aggregate and the prices the Times is not informed. The price in Corvallis is now 12 1/2 and 13 cents with a slightly better tone abroad.

An advance in the price of fresh meat—already phenomenally high—is now going on. There appears to be no good reason for this. The explanation offered by the beef trust, which controls the market, is that the farmers who supply the cattle are too busy harvesting their crops to bring their stock to market. This obviously applies to only the small farmers, who keep a few cattle, incident to the farming operations, and not to the big companies on the great ranges, from whose herds the wholesale meat supply of the country is drawn. Besides, as retail dealers, who have to meet the burden of the consumer's complaint, admit, the same conditions prevailed in other years when prices were not advanced. "The plain truth," says the Philadelphia Ledger, "probably is that the beef trust is making a vigorous effort to capture the foreign markets, and to do so must sell its goods therein at low prices. Losing in this venture, it must recoup itself by taxing the American consumer." To this may be added the fact that the trust has the consumer at its mercy. An illustration of the traditional "ground-hog case" is hereby brought home to every family in the land. The people "must have meat." The beef trust controls the market, and can charge what it chooses; the consumer must pay or go without. Some people—many, perhaps—must go without, but there are enough who can have and will have meat, at whatever cost, to pay the exorbitant prices charged by the trust. The vegetarian, in the meantime, though lean and hungry-looking, should be and probably is happy, as he is clearly master of the situation.—Portland Oregonian.

Struck It Rich.

The Modockers who remained at Republic are in luck at last, and if reports are true are already fixed for life, says the Alturas Pionadealer. About two and a half miles from Republic is a little valley called California Flat, and where Billy Page, Billy Combs and other Modockers camped. There, most of them remained. The other day, as the story goes, Miss Jessie Combs and Miss Newport discovered gold in the bed of the creek and before night panned out $20 worth of the glittering stuff. Immediately excitement ran high, but Billy Combs, J. N. Newport, Al Thistle and Ed Hansen got the cream of the find. At last accounts only one claim had been opened, that of Mr. Newport, and was paying $100 per day. Of course a big rush resulted. What seems strange is that the flat had been occupied so long; in fact had been used for a camping place, and the hills on either side had been tunneled everywhere for gold.

The "Net Waist Girl."

The girls this summer are to wear the net waist, a garment so gauzy and transparent that one can see every pulsation of their dear little hearts. One who has inspected these new-fangled waists turns himself loose as follows:
"The shirt-waist man and the net-waist girl go hand in hand today, and all the people year after year keep throwing their clothes away. The coat and vest we laid to rest and where is the fleecy shawl? And the clothes get thinner and fewer—what will be the end of it all? Oh, what will the shirt-waist man take next from the things he had to wear? And what will the net waist girl throw off her shoulders now so near?
"The shirt-waist man and net waist girl go rollicking down the way. Have we started a thread that is going to end in the old fig leaf, some-day?"

The Best Liniment For Strains.

Mr. E. H. Wells, the merchant at Deer Park, Long Island, N. Y., says: "I always recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm as the best liniment for strains. I used it last winter for a severe lameness in the side, resulting from a strain, and was greatly pleased with the quick relief and cure it effected." For sale by Beall's Drug Store.

Heartburn.

When the quantity of food taken is too large or the quality too rich, heartburn is likely to follow, and especially so if the digestion has been weakened by constipation. Eat slowly and not too freely of easily digested food. Masticate the food thoroughly. Let six hours elapse between meals and when you feel a fullness and weight in the region of the stomach after eating, indicating that you have eaten too much, take one of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and the heartburn may be avoided. For sale by Beall's Drug Store.
