M'KINLEY'S BUFFALO SPEECH.

In 1890, when the McKinley tariff bill was under consideration, the purpose of a tariff was to build up American industries. During Cleveland's first administration there had been an effort made to pass a low revenue tariff, which was defeated in the Senate. The election of General Harrison in 1888 was accepted as the verdict of the nation in favor of a protective policy. William McKinley was chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and the tariff bill prepared by that committee became known as the McKinley tariff. It was a high protective measure and conducted materially to the prosperity of the country under the Harrison administration.

The trade conditions of the country have changed since 1890. Then we were building up home industries; now home industries are built up and markets are needed for an overflow of production. In his Buffalo speech President McKinley recognized more fully than was anticipated the change which has come over the industrial condition of the country. In that speech he advocated what he called sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production and which will enable us to "extend the outlets for an increasing surplus by a system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities."

The President was apparently aware that he was outlining a change in the policy of the Republican party, but his well considered phrases in no way concealed the character of the policy he submits to the country. When he says, "We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor," he gives utterance to a trade truism which no one will dispute. The difficulty of carrying out such a policy is left to the details of legislation. The question will resolve itself into a proposition to increase our sale in foreign markets as much as possible with the least possible sacrifice of our home market.

A kindred measure with reciprocity is the establishment of new steamship lines with countries with which we propose to do an increased trade. The new lines that have been put in commission between the Pacific Coast ports of the United States and ports on the western coasts of Mexico and Central and South America should be followed up with direct steamship lines between the Eastern ports of the United States and South American ports. This suggestion indicates the field in which the greatest expansion of our trade is possible. Communication between Northern Atlantic ports and the ports of South America is now carried on through London. There seems to be no limit to the capital that can be secured for the establishment of steamship lines across the Pacific, but capital is shy of investment in the South American trade. He was a warm advocate of the policy of building up our merchant marine and the construction of an isthmian canal. "The construction of a Pacific cable," he says, "cannot be longer postponed."

Ever since the President was shot the talk of the day has been how to better protect the person of the President, and how to bar out the anarchists who simply aim to destroy society and government. The secret service has been a failure as a protector of the President. Body guards have failed to prevent the assassin from striking down the President. Mr. McKinley never was relieved in such protection. He did not desire to have himself surrounded by detectives and guards. He believed that public sentiment was the best protection to a President. He was right as to the ordinary inhabitant of the country. He was wrong as to the anarchists. They have murder in their hearts, and unless that feeling can be stamped out murders will be committed. The people who believe in government are the easiest governed. Anarchists do not believe in government and therefore they will not obey the government, unless they are made to do so.

The Filipinos, when they heard that President McKinley was dead thought that Bryan would be President. They will learn something about our Government in the course of a generation. They are about 100 years behind the times.

Roof Paint.

The best piece of work on the farm and at least expense of labor and of material I think, that I ever did was in painting the roofs of several of my farm buildings with a mixture of the ordinary dry red mineral roof paint (venetian red) and skim milk, made of the consistency of a thin wash, adding a small amount of lamp black to darken the color a little. This I put on with a knapsack spray pump, getting on the crown of the roof and spraying both sides of same in a few minutes. The paint material used upon a roof of an 18x24-foot building costing about 25 cents. I put it on some two years ago, and making a perfect job, and I defy anyone today to distinguish it from an oil paint roof. In less than an hour after putting it on one of the buildings it rained quite a heavy shower, and the water came from the roof clear and uncolored. Then the sides of the buildings getting a good coat of whitewash presents a neat appearance. Spray pump does not make quite as good a job on the sides of buildings, but does a better job on shingle roofs than one can with a brush. On rough surfaces I think the milk paint is as lasting as the oil paint.—J. F. Cass, Skagit, Wash., in Practical Farmer.

At the price stated above every farmer and rancher in Lake county should have his barns, woodshed, chicken house and other outhouses painted.

Lakeview Among the Best.

The editor of The Post took a little spin down to the county seat last week and can speak well for that town's renewed prosperity. Several new dwellings are under course of construction, and all the business men seem to be in good spirits. The new town looks rummy. W. K. Barry is building a new hotel near his big livery stable that will be a credit to the town. A livery stable will soon be erected on Main street by the Vernon boys. Building continues and the town gives out every appearance of a lively business town. There are business places there that can't be beat in Eastern Oregon. The merchandise stores of Ayres, Whitworth & Ayres, Bailey & Massingill, Reynolds & Wingfield, Ahlstrom Bros. and J. E. Bernard & Son are among the best. Other business is proportionately large, and the town is flourishing.

The wise policy of President McKinley will be continued by President Roosevelt, who pledged himself voluntarily after he took the oath of office, from Judge John R. Hazel, in the Ainsley Wilcox home, at Buffalo, as follows: "In this hour of deep and national bereavement I wish to state that it shall be my aim to continue absolutely unbroken the policy of President McKinley for the peace and prosperity and honor of our beloved country."

A Certain Cure for Dysentery and Diarrhoea

"Some years ago I was one of a party that intended making a long bicycle trip," says F. L. Taylor, of New Albany, Bradford County, Pa. "I was taken suddenly with diarrhoea, and was about to give up the trip, when editor Ward, of the Laceyville Messenger, suggested that I take a dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I purchased a bottle and took two doses, one before starting and one on the route. I made the trip successful and never felt any ill effect. Again last summer I was almost completely run down with an attack of dysentery. I bought a bottle of this same remedy and this time one dose cured me." Sold by Beall's Drug Store.
