

LOVER WITH AN ANCESTOR

The Valentine Stratagem Of a Despairing Artist.

Cecil Chrome, the aspiring young artist, sat with his head buried in his hands. It was rapidly growing dusk in the studio, and he was losing precious moments. Before him on the easel stood a small oil dab of a young girl dressed in a bright purple gown. The girl's complexion was positively un-canny, while as for her position no one but a double jointed acrobat could have maintained it for a second. Chrome gave it one look, then he closed his eyes in horror.

"No use!" he groaned; "the thing is impossible, as the French say. I never was made for an artist, but, oh, what a business man was lost in me!" He fished around in the pocket of his velvet jacket and by an unusual chance found a cigarette. "Who, I should like to know, for instance," he muttered, "changed Tom Impressionist's picture of a Grecian maiden at the fountains into an advertisement of Lather & Co.'s soap and by this act of good judgment caused said picture to sell for $10? You did that, Chrome, my boy, and now Impressionist is on the high road to wealth! Who showed Jack-Bah?" he continued, impatiently kicking over his stool and walking up and down. "How is that going to help me? I adore Alice Newlyrich—worship the ground she walks upon—and her father's millions. If I could only marry her, the old man would take me into his business, and then my natural talents would have a chance to shine. But how can I do that? I am only tolerated in the house because I am supposed to be a genius! The day after tomorrow is St. Valentine's day. She will give a dinner; I shall not be invited, but that young broker will. Oh, if at least I had noble blood in my veins to appeal to the old man's toadyism! As for the girl, I believe she's half mine already."

Chrome relapsed into a state of despair. Suddenly he gave a cry of exultation. "Why not?" he exclaimed as he clapped on his hat and coat and raced out like a madman. "This is a case where my brush must help me for once."

It was late when he returned, carrying with him a roll of parchment, a bottle of brown chemical and half a dozen queerly shaped packages. He worked till past midnight and then proudly laid on the table a document quaintly flowered and illumined which appeared at least several hundred years old, after which performance he sat down and wrote the following letter:

Dear Miss Newlyrich—St. Valentine's day is at hand. The poor artist can give nothing to the beautiful heiress which she has not already. My heart, as you know, is yours till death. Tonight as I sat heartbroken in my little studio I took out my little box of treasures and came across this. It is yellowed with age, and it has been handed down in our family from father to son as a priceless treasure. As the quaint lettering will tell you, it was a valentine sent by my ancestor, Guy de Chrome, to the Lady Beatrice, but, alas, his love was more fortunate than mine! The last scion of the Chromes no longer admits to the world his noble blood. His pride forbids him on account of his poverty, but to you, beloved of his heart, he confides his secret. He has no right to breathe the words of love his heart dictates. He can only send you as a little keepsake his one treasure. Perhaps in the midst of gaiety you may grant it a sigh as you read it and reflect on what might have happened if we had both lived in those favored days.

The first thing in the morning a messenger boy delivered a scroll-like package at the Newlyrich mansion. That afternoon Cecil received a little note:

Dear Mr. Chrome—I'm so sorry, but papa happened to come in just as I was opening your lovely valentine, and of course I was obliged to tell him all about it. He was much interested. I hope you received my invitation to take dinner with us tomorrow. We shall particularly expect you. Yours sincerely, ALICE NEWLYRICH.

P. S.—What a pretty coat of arms you have! Cecil Chrome went to the St. Valentine's day dinner and was more than hospitably received. Not very long afterward there was a grand wedding and the bride's carriage sported a gorgeous escutcheon. I may add in passing that just about this time a certain sign was changed in the business district. It now reads "Newlyrich, Chrome & Co.," and in the home of the junior partner there hangs a valuable antique—a valentine written by one of his ancestors over 300 years ago. MAUD ROBINSON.

A Greater Need.

The Young People's Weekly prints a pathetic story of a poor, half starved child, living in a city alley. Some one had given her a ticket to a free tea and entertainment.

She was wild with delight and was running to tell her mother of her good fortune when she stumbled over a child crouched on the stairs, crying.

She asked what was the matter. The child said her mother had beaten her because she asked for some breakfast, and she was so hungry she could not help crying.

"Well," said the other child, placing the ticket in her hand, "take this and get a good tea. I've had no breakfast either, but my mother never beats me."

The McCallen Twins Celebrate.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. A. McCallen was the scene of a delightful lawn party Thursday evening, Sept. 5, the occasion being the thirteenth anniversary of the advent of the twins. Edna and Edward McCallen, says the Ashland Tidings. Thirteen girls and thirteen boys near their own age made a happy number who did not let the grass grow under their feet on the lawn nor the echoes die in the house corners during the evening, which was spent in merry games on the lantern lighted lawn and in the house. Hears were made glad around the long tables spread with cakes, ice cream, candies and fruits. Altogether the evening was enjoyed as only the youth can enjoy, while each departing guest wished the twins had more celebrations of that kind. The little misses present were Edith Strange, Verda Norris, Fay Kitchen, Hazel McConnell, Leta Vaupel, Angie Walrad, Bessie Fuller, Katie Shook, Jessie Patterson, Beulah Caldwell, Edna McCallen; Masters Donald Rice, Ralph Norris, Orval Caldwell, Ray Taylor, Charles Logan, Lawrence Clayton, Cecil Rhodes, Harrison Howell, Roy Hicks, Edward McCallen, Andrew McCallen.

E. B. Munday, a lawyer of Henrietta, Tex., once fooled a grave-digger. He says: "My brother was very low with malarial fever and jaundice. They "Locked Horns."

One evening about a week ago Thos. Sherlock of Summer Lake went out to milk his cow and passed through a lot where he kept some bucks. Two of them had been fighting and their horns were locked together in such a manner that they could not be loosed. Mr. Sherlock worked with them for some time but his efforts to release the sheep were fruitless. He finally concluded to saw the horns off, and began the operation by the light of a lantern. He sawed one horn off three times before he could get them loose, and he was covered with blood from head to foot. The horns of a ram are springy and when the animals fight they come together with such force and violence that very often their horns clasp together so tightly that it is impossible to get free. This happens on the range occasionally and if they are not discovered they starve to death. Buck deer do the same way, as carcases have been found with the antlers locked. One can see an evidence of this at the Innes ranch where the brothers have two pair locked together that were picked up in the mountains years ago.
