

NECESSITY FOR GOOD ROADS

Mean a Great Economic Gain in Marketing Produce.

In a country as large as that in which we live, with the greater part of its producing regions widely separated from the markets which they serve, the matter of transportation is one of vast importance, says Martin Dodge in The Forum. This applies particularly to our agricultural products, for while a great portion both of our manufactured output and of our farm growth must be moved long distances by rail or water before reaching a market, practically all of the latter must also be transported for greater or less distances over the public highways. The question of marketing these agricultural products, amounting in the United States to $1,000,000,000 annually, in terms that the dealer can afford to pay and the grower to accept often reduces itself to a question of cheap and quick delivery—in other words, to a question of economical transportation.

As far as the railways and steamship lines are concerned, this problem has been dealt with very intelligently and satisfactorily. Skill and money have been applied without stint to the provision of enlarged means of conveyance, improved ways and increased power. These influences, under the stress of strong competition, have reduced long distance freight rates to a reasonable level.

There is one phase of this transportation problem, however, which has approached us with satisfactory solution—that is the matter of wagon road haul. As has already been said, while the greater part of our farm products travel by steamship, canal or railway for a portion of the journey to market, virtually them are conveyed for some distance over the public highways. It is quite true that this is often the most important part of their journey. It has been shown by mathematical demonstration that it costs more to move a ton of wheat or a ton of hay ten miles over the average country roads of the United States than to transport the same burden 500 miles by railway or 100 miles by steamship.

It has happened many times in different parts of the country that farmers let crops go to waste because of hauling them to the nearest railway shipping point over a road and then kept roads mounted than could be realized for them. Whereas if good roads on heavy loads could be hauled and in hand the same crops could have been marketed at a small profit to the grower, while the economic gain resulting from their application to useful purposes would have been very considerable.

BITUMINOUS MACADAM.

Promises to Make the Best Pavement Ever Invented.

During the past year a new kind of road improvement has been inaugurated, which promises to turn out the best and most permanent roadway either for highway or pavement for cities or yet invented. It has been used in Canada for several years, and with great success at Hamilton, where it is known as "tar macadam." Here it is called "bituminous macadam" and has been improved and given a very durable form.

During the past season well on to 100,000 square yards have been laid in different New England cities and in some cities of the middle states and middle west. Just recently a contract was awarded an Ohio pavement company for laying three miles of this bituminous pavement on the state road in Cuyahoga county, leading out of Cleveland, at an expense of $69,000.

Wherever it has been laid, either in this country or in Canada, it is said to have given unvarying satisfaction. The manner in which it has been laid in the New England cities has given it a permanent form which is likely to make it one of the strong competitors of the asphalt trust, for it is as smooth as asphalt, more elastic, less noisy and promises to be more durable and more easily kept in repair, although costing about half the price per cubic yard of sheet asphalt. In New Bedford, Lowell, Somerville, Cambridge, Holyoke and other places where it has been laid it has given the utmost satisfaction.

Not a Matter of Sentiment.

Road improvement is no longer a matter of sentiment, but is a question of ways and means, and scarcely a taxpayer in country or city grumbles at fair appropriations for this purpose.
