It is understood that one day this week was the time fixed by the cattlemen of Klamath to remove Lake county sheep from the ranges of Sprague river. Edler, and Grob & Batchelder, we learn, are the parties who have caused the ire of the Klamath cattlemen. The woolgrowers claim their right to range there and are in no mood to be dictated to. The cattlemen are supposed to be equally determined, and trouble is expected. It is said that determined men are in charge of the bands of sheep.

Stock Inspector Clarkson returned from the Sprague river and Slean country last week, and reports the flocks in that section comparatively free from "scab". While on the headquarters of Sprague river he was the guest of J. N. Watson, who has secluded himself for the past few months at his beautiful mountain ranch in that locality. Clarkson says Watson has a perfect garden spot up there, and when the railroad strikes that point he will ship garden products to market.

Mrs. C. E. Sherlock and two sons Ned and Irving, and Miss Rose Venator, left here Thursday for Summer Lake, where they will spend a few weeks at the pleasant home of Thos. H. Sherlock.

Stock Inspector Clarkson informs The Examiner that 50,000 migratory sheep have passed under the Summer Lake rimrock and through Slean this summer, and that these bands have pretty thoroughly cleared the ranges of feed. The local woolgrowers should combine in an effort to do something to compel the migratory owners to either pass through the ranges in reasonable time or make them pay a tax.

George Whorton, of the Palace, can go some when it comes to riding bucking horses, but Dan Malloy says he wrote on ahead to the railroad officials at Ashland to lock the Pullman when George got aboard for fear he would fall off. Malloy also intimates that Whorton can't ride a load of hay. He certainly gave a very bad exhibition of horsemanship last Sunday evening when Jim Clarkson's horse unseated him.
