LAKEVIEW, OREGON, JULY 30, 1903.

The Pope of Rome Is Dead.

ROME, July 20.—4:40 P. M.—The Pope died shortly after 4 o'clock this afternoon. His moments were comparatively peaceful and painless, and were preceded by a period of insensibility. Around the bedside at the final moment were the cardinals, the relatives and members of the papal court.

Before lapsing into unconsciousness the dying Pontiff feebly moved his lips, his last articulate words being those used in bestowing a benediction.

The news of the Pope's death spread rapidly throughout Rome and caused a most profound sensation.

The Pope's death agony was short, and was terminated by a paroxysm of choking. After a short interval Cardinal Serafino Vannutelli intoned the requiem amidst the weeping of those present. Then all kissed Pope Leo's hand before leaving the chamber.

Race Program Out.

The speed program for the races to be held at Klamath Falls in October was made out by the directors of the association Saturday. $2000 in purses is offered for four days racing, offering sufficient inducement to bring some good strings of horses here, a number of them having already arrived. The program is a good one and arranged in such a manner as to afford horses of nearly all racing distances a chance each day, so that the races will probably have plenty of entries and some good contests result. It is expected that the attendance at the Klamath County Fair this fall will be unusually large.—Express.

A Scientific Note.

The professor's boy had been obstreperous all the evening, and finally forbearance ceased to be a virtue. "Here," said the professor as he took the boy under his arm and started up the stairs, "is where you see the eclipse of the sun." Shortly thereafter the guests remarked among themselves that they never knew an eclipse was such a noisy affair.—Denver Times.

What Caused the Indigestion.

"Mollie Brown has a model husband." "In what way?" "Whenever he doesn't eat anything she asks him if the cooking isn't as good as his mother's." "And what does he say?" "He says he has no doubt it is, but that his indigestion has quite unfitted him to be a competent judge."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Extract From a Novel.

"She gave him a black look."—Chicago News.

Responsibilities.

"Remember," said the serious citizen, "that wealth has its responsibilities." "Yes," answered Mr. Cumrox. "So long as you are humble and obscure you can say 'I seen it' and 'I done it' and eat with your knife all you want to."—Washington Star.

OREGON HOT SPRINGS.

the road and stand in puddles and are kept warm from the fountain head. The strange horse shies through the place as if he were wading through a boiling lake, and the great clouds of smoke give it the appearance of an active volcano.

THE EARTH IS HOT.

The ground for more than a quarter of a mile along the road at this point is warm, so uncomfortably warm that an unshod horse is timid about walking over it, and the stage drivers do not permit their horses to stand long at one point for fear it will do injury to their feet. The section of country about this place is covered with snow from late in the fall until early spring, but the snow does not lie on the ground at this immediate point. As fast as it falls it is converted into vapor by the hot earth and rises in a dense steam. Rain is dried up in the same manner. Immediately after a snowfall or rainfall the ground dries off and is as baked and parched as if it were mid-summer. Through the entire winter the place is covered with a seething mass of steam. As the snow melts on the outer edges and the water runs down on the hot section it is dried up instantly, and with the hot earth beneath him and the dense steam all around him, the timid is suspicious that the "lower regions" are not far away, or that a volcano is about to burst out beneath his feet.

CAN'T RAISE DUCKS.

O'Neal, the station keeper, has repeatedly attempted to raise ducks, but as often failed. He has bought eggs from a distance and had them hatched out on the place, thinking that instinct would warn the young against the danger of coming in contact with the hot water. But as soon as they get large enough to walk they find the running stream of hot water, and run into it heedlessly for a swim, and are consequently scalded to death. After several costly experiments Mr. O'Neal has given up the idea of raising ducks at his present place.

But there are hundreds of hot springs not included in the foregoing, and they are known to possess great medicinal qualities. Many people of Eastern Oregon expect to see the day when these springs will be taken advantage of throughout the Pacific Northwest. They say that with the building of railroads into that country the hot springs, like hundreds of other resources, will become an important factor in bringing wealth to the country.

Sufficient Reason.

Tom Hood had just finished the "Song of the Shirt." "But why," asked his friends, "didn't you write the 'Song of the Socks?'" "I tried to," faltered the poet, "but the feet wouldn't fit." Perceiving that he was a size too many, they put him in a class of his own.—New York Times.
