A Molecule of alcohol is composed of two atoms of carbon, six of hydrogen and one of oxygen; so synthetic alcohol is obtained by uniting these atoms accordingly. For a long time it has been known that by direct combination of carbon and hydrogen in the electric arc acetylene can be obtained. Sufficient hydrogen must be added to the acetylene to produce ethylene, a constituent of illuminating gas. In combining water with the ethylene alcohol is obtained. Thus alcohol is produced in France without the employment of vegetable matter.
