WASHINGTON'S MODEL FARM.

Father of His Country Wanted to Be Its Leading Agriculturist.

In his mature life Washington's one expressed ambition was to be the leading farmer of America, and he worked diligently to earn that title by introducing new methods of husbandry. He even invented a plow. In his progressiveness he conducted what might be not inappropriately termed the first practical experimental agricultural station on the continent. All the latest machinery he learned about he promptly imported. He tried many kinds of tobacco and wheat, experimented with various kinds of fertilizers and developed the breeding of thoroughbred horses, cattle and sheep.

There were many industries on Washington's farms. He maintained a blacksmith shop, which, in addition to the work of the plantation, shod horses and repaired implements and wagons for the neighbors. He had also a force of carpenters whom at times he hired out to construct dwelling houses in Alexandria and the national capital. Washington conducted a flour mill at Mount Vernon and established an enviable and profitable reputation for the extra brand of flour produced. He often bought wheat from other farms in Virginia and ground it into flour for the market. A cooperage was another of his industries, and even the schooners that carried his barrels to market belonged to him.

It would be hard to imagine a more complete establishment than that which he conducted. Shoemakers at Mount Vernon turned out all the shoes worn on the estate. Weavers in his employ produced the linen, the woollens, the linsey and the cotton cloth needed. There was also a distillery, the revenue from which sometimes exceeded $1,500 annually. His fisheries along the Potomac were also resources of considerable profit.—Leslie's Monthly.

Wanted a Rebate.

A southern clergyman had married a pair of negroes. After the ceremony the groom asked, "How much yo' change fo' dis?"

"Well," said the minister, "I usually leave that to the groom. Sometimes I am paid $5, sometimes $10, sometimes less."

"Dat's a lot ob money, pahson. Tell yo' what Ah'll do. Ah'll gib yo' two dollahs, an' den ef I fin' I ain't cheated I'll gib yo' mo' in a monf."

A month later the groom returned.

"Ah's yere lak Ah promised, pahson."

"Yes," said the minister expectantly.

"Ah tol' you' dat ef it was all right, Ah'd gib yo' mo' money, didn't Ah?"

"You did."

"Well, pahson, as dis yere am a sort ob speculation Ah reckon yo' owe me about a dollah an' eighty-five cents, an' Ah come ter git it."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

He Did the Correct Thing.

Any one could have told from the fearless glint of his blue eyes and the rakish tilt of his cap that he was of the class of messenger boys known to their fellows as "wise." He knew a few things. After he finished his fifteen cent meal at the lunch counter he went up to the six foot waiter, who made him look like a dwarf by comparison.

"Gimme my check," he demanded imperiously.

The waiter meekly scribbled the amount on a slip and handed it to the diminutive customer.

"Here, go buy yerself an automobile," said his lordship the messenger, dropping a nickel into the big waiter's hand.—New York Press.

The Foreigners.

Every one has heard of the woman visiting France for the first time who expressed her surprise that "even the young children spoke French so fluently." She was much like the Englishman described in a book of travel.

He was very fond of traveling and took great delight in lionizing different cities which we visited, but in one respect he was a stanch John Bull. No power on earth could persuade him that when he resided in Florence, for example, he could possibly be called a foreigner.

"No, ma'am," he used to say; "the Italians are foreigners, but I am an Englishman!"
