RAILROADS AFTER OUR TIMBER.

The following is an excerpt from an article on the developing of Oregon's timber which was published in the January number of the Columbia River and Oregon Timberman:

The completion of the Klamath Lake Railroad from Laidra, in Shasta county, California, along the north bank of the Klamath river into Klamath county, Oregon, is probably the line with the greatest strategic commercial value. The Klamath river cuts through the Cascade and Coast ranges, and will develop through its extension an empire in area, carrying good bodies of sugar and white pine. The isolation which this line has partially broken has been the most complete in Oregon.

The extension of the Klamath Lake Railroad to Klamath Lake will furnish an outlet for the timber tributary to Klamath lake and tributary streams. This line taps the largest body of sugar and yellow pine in Oregon.

The extension of the Northern California & Oregon Railroad from its terminus at Madeline, in Northeastern California, to Lakeview, Oregon, will tap the yellow pine of Lake and Klamath counties and furnish an eastern outlet via Reno, Nevada.

Head of Noted Firm Dead.

The announcement of the death of Albert Harding is made in the Commercial Bulletin of Boston of the 6th. That paper says:

"The sudden death of Albert E. Harding on Tuesday last came with a terrible shock to the wool trade of Boston. Mr. Harding was the senior partner of the well known Boston house, Harding & Caverly. Both partners had that kind of business reputation that has helped to build up Boston's reputation for financial honor. Mr. Caverly has always been especially popular in the wool growing districts.

Mr. Harding was but a year or so beyond 50 years of age. He was trained in the wool trade under his father in the firm of Harding, Gray & Dewey, his father being the senior partner. Some 25 years ago he established the firm of Harding & Martin, later Harding, Martin & Caverly, and now Harding & Caverly. The firm made a specialty of Territory wools even before they occupied their present commanding position as compared to fleece wools. There never has been a breath upon the honor of the firm, and it would be hard to find the record of one unkind word uttered against them in the trade.

Mr. Harding leaves a widow, a daughter and three sons. The eldest son, already a favorite as his father before him, is still a student at Harvard.

Mr. Harding's funeral was held at his home in Cohasset yesterday afternoon. As a token of respect to his memory the entire wool trade of Boston closed their doors for the afternoon.

Still young, successful in business, fortunate in his marriage and blessed with a beautiful daughter, and manly sons. Mr. Harding certainly seemed to have everything to live for. His only burden was the terrible cross of agonizing physical pain from an affliction of the nerves that hastened his untimely and pathetic end."

It will be remembered that Bailey & Massingill are the local representatives of this Boston Wool firm, and much regret is expressed by the sheepmen of the county. Mr. Harding's death will cause no change in the business, and the representatives will be in the field as usual the coming spring.

The most complete job stock off of the railroad is to be found at The Examiner office. First-class work always, at reasonable prices. tt.
