Money the Root of All Evil.

The city treasurer of San Jose is $7000 short in his accounts. This is another case of a young man living beyond his means; no intention at first to default, but the disposition to spend grows and at last detection and disgrace. That the love of money is the root of all evil is a fact beyond any doubt and the worship of the dollar is growing stronger each day in America until it is the standard by which all men and women are measured. The man who has the biggest bank account and the woman who displays the most silk and diamonds, are the leaders in business and society, toadled to by three-fourths of the people. Their intellectual standing or moral worth is not considered at this date. No wonder the young men sacrifice all to make the show and keep pace with the so-called society of today. The nation must get back to the good, old days of homes, farms, honesty in public affairs, the worship of the true God, else it must perish from the earth.—Willows Journal.

John Duckworth's delivery horse knows a good thing when he can think of it. The best thing he could think of last Friday evening, when an assignment of merchandise had been loaded on the wagon, was to go to the barn. And no doubt believing that a moment's delay would prove disastrous to his purpose he acted upon the spur of the moment while Mr. Duckworth's thoughts were otherwise engaged, and pressing the go-ahead button he proceeded down the street, delivering goods on every corner. He had a hurry-up there look on when Mr. Duckworth reached his barn where stood his horseship in waiting.

His wife has for some time been in a hospital in San Francisco, and it is believed that the fact of her continued illness with little hope for recovery caused Mr. Hartery to commit suicide, as evidence was strong that he had taken a large dose of strychnine.
