

HIS PARTING SHOT.

What the Deacon Thought of His First Turkish Bath.

The two young men had induced the deacon to take his first Turkish bath. They had got him properly attired, or, rather, unattired, and had him conducted into the hot room.

The deacon didn't enjoy it, but he was game. He rolled around nervously on his cot, and every time he moved he seemed to strike a hotter spot. But he stood it like a man until the perspiration made rivulets innumerable in running off him. Then he lifted himself up on his elbow and said plaintively:

"Let's get out of this." But the young men only laughed and told him to keep quiet; that it was just getting comfortable.

When he finally absolutely refused to stand it any longer they led him into the steam room and sat down to gossip and enjoy his discomfort as he felt himself slowly boiling away.

And the deacon seemed inclined to lose his temper. It was aggravating to be so extremely uncomfortable when they apparently were enjoying themselves and would offer him no means of escape that would, to say the least, be dignified.

But there was an end of it. He got out, and as he looked "more in sorrow than in anger" from one to the other of them one asked:

"Well, deacon, what do you think of it?" The deacon replied solemnly and with all due dignity, but rather pointedly:

"It's a good thing, young man; it's a remarkably convenient thing for some people who need to suitably prepare themselves for the hereafter. But for my part I am glad to get on earth again."—Chicago Post.

Exposition Start.

"Papa," said the distinguished statesman's petted daughter, "you have never told me anything about the house in which you were born."

"No, my child," he replied, with a groan, "I have not. I could not bear to destroy the fond illusion that your father is a great man. I am not a great man, my dear. I am an inventor. I was not born in a log cabin, out in a three story brick with stone trimmings!" And he turned away in anguish.—Chicago Tribune.

Sally and Willie.

"Strange about giddy young girls, isn't it, Sally?" "Low so, Willie?" "Why, there's a girl in town who used to be at that she was kissed by President Grant when she was a baby, but she now declares it was President Hayes who kissed her. In a few years she will be claiming that President Roosevelt kissed her when she was a mere child."—Roller Monthly.

A Financial Note.

"What's up, old man? I never saw you look so haggard." "The Steenth bank is up; that's what's up. And my deposit's gone up with it."

"Oh, I wouldn't let a thing like that upset me." "I'm not upset; merely lost my balance."—Philadelphia Press.

A Watery Farewell.

An Irishman and a Frenchman were parting at the steamer. The Irishman, standing on the wharf waving his hand to his friend, shouted, "O reservoir!" The Frenchman, politely saluting, replied, "Thanks!"—Boston Christian Register.

Hard Work and Much of It.

"Is it hard to be a detective?" asked the young woman admiringly. "Very," answered Old Slookshaw. "It keeps a man studying day and night to behave like the detectives that the story writers describe."—Washington Star.

INSTINCT.

They christened him Reginald Percy Vere. They dressed him in ruffles and curled his back hair; His mother declared him her own precious dear. And forbade him to play with the boys around there. Which was more than poor Reginald Percy could bear.

So he went out one day, curls and ruffles and all. And strayed where the ruderst of boys congregate. Soon Reginald's ire, though his body was small, Increased to proportions remarkably great. And he issued a challenge, regardless of weight.

Now Reginald's eye has turned blacker than jet. But he isn't complaining, which seems rather queer. Till you learn that the other boy's eye's blacker yet; And there isn't a happier youth, far or near. Than this dirty faced Reginald Percy Vere. —Washington Star.
