GNORANT DISPLAY.

NOW MORE IN EVIDENCE THAN COURTLY MANNERS OF OLD.

Suavity and Stateliness of War Ancestors Would Be Ridiculed in This Day of "Newly-Rich" Vulgarity.

You often hear the expression "a fine and gentleman or lady of the ancient shool - coaning shereby a stately courtesy and tog Bised, though kindly enting which were common in greatgrandado, nel a saga, but want are too often lost eight of in our own. In the days of our grandmothers they 100% life leisurely, more easily, and were net in a hurry even for the laugh. The dwelt more on the pleasant things of life, studied more the pleasure and confort of their kinsfolk and acquaintances, and this mere practice of a virtue as the fashion of the day shed abroad in the heart a kindliness and a grace for which we have nothing in modern times to correspond. One has only to meet for a moment one of these old ladies to note the sevenity, the thoughtful consideration, the almost formal respect, not for the feelings alone, but for the mere opinions of everyone present. It is well to have a grandmother in the house, if for no other purpose than to teach the young how to behave toward one another; to show them by precept and example the worthlessness of any pleasere purchased at the cost of pain to The best teacher a man ever had was his old-fashioned grand-

There is no doubt that the "new riches" which sprang up since the civil war have vulgarized manners by igperant display. Money can never make a gentleman. The latter is the product. of blood, inheritance and education. The old-time courseons, breve, feelishly extravagant, and slickether too passionate southern planter of the old regime fives only in fiction. The Inickerbocker of New York is squeezed out by imposing, massive frontage and ostentatious liveries of the new Four Hundred. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' "Brahmin" class in New England is extinct. Truly, the "fine old Irish centleman" in our days would be snowballed on the streets and laughed at in the ballroom, But if riches are often vulgar, they are generous. Never before have we spent much on education higher and lower, or given more to increase the true and beautiful in art or "sweetness and light" in literature and science.

It is reported from Johannesburg that new and unexpected source of wealth has been discovered in the territory of the late Boer republic. Near the easiern border of the Transvani, on the edge of the lorey South African platers, three index of the ore have been found, and the deposits are apparently to extensive that predictions are heard that the new colony may prove to be as fich in tin and copper as it is already known to be in gold.
