The United States Supreme court has rendered a decision in the habeas corpus case of John A. Benson, member of the California land ring. Benson was striving to resist removal from New York to Washington, D. C. for trial. The court decided against Benson. the lands irrigated. (3) They agree to pay the charges for the water rights required by the Reclamation Act. (4) They agree that their land shall be security for the government charge for water, and that such charges shall be a lien on the land which the association may enforce if they do not pay for the water. (5) They agree to dispose of the lands they own which are in excess of the limit of lands in private ownership permitted to apply for water rights from the government system.

Q—How is the association managed?
A—Directly by the water users themselves and through the officers elected by them.

Q—How much water will be furnished to each water user?

A—He will receive his proportional part of the entire supply in the hands of the association, not in excess of the amount necessary for the proper cultivation of his land.

Q—What assurance has he of a sufficient supply?

A—The association is required to limit the lands represented by its shares to the area which the government has determined can be cultivated to the highest efficiency.

Q—What will be the cost of the government water right?

A—The smallest amount consistent with permanent work. Steel and concrete will be used whenever required. The heaviest part of the cost—that is, the maintenance, which goes on forever, will be reduced to a minimum.

Q—What is the connection between the association and the government?

A—Before beginning construction the Government will make a contract with the association, in which the latter will guarantee the payments and agree to enforce the collections from its shareholders by means of the lien on their lands if necessary.

Q—Does the shareholder derive any advantage from this lien?

A—Yes, it protects him against the possibility of being required to pay for a shifless neighbor's water right, for without the lien the association would be required to assess each member for any deficiency.

Q—How soon must a man dispose of his excess land?

A—He will not be required to do so before the government is ready to furnish the water, thus gaining the benefits of advanced prices resulting from the large expenditures of the government and the sure prospect of water, and having, without expense, a good market for his land that he could have had under no other conditions.

Q—What is done to make certain that such excess lands are sold?

A—The owner must agree that if he does not sell them to a properly qualified person by the time the government water is ready, the association shall have power to do so.

Q—Will the lands be sacrificed by the association?

A—No, every officer and member of the association is a land owner, and a depreciation of land values is against his interest. The demand for land will probably be so great, as construction approaches completion, that large prices can be easily realized by the owner himself.
Q—How are former water rights affected by joining the association?
A—The Reclamation Act expressly protects vested water rights. By joining the association the owner of such rights puts them in the care of the association and the water is to be delivered to him as before, being included in the complete supply furnished from the government system. His priority of water remains intact, is protected by the Articles of the Association and may be re-assessed
