The Railroad Situation.

E. H. Harriman and J. J. Hill, the men in whose power has rested the railroad situation in the Northwest for several years past, have come to terms, and have agreed to divide the Northwest field. To these two men is assigned the responsibility of opening up new territory; and also the nonactivity in other sections. For many years isolated portions of the Northwest have prayed and hoped for railroad transportation, and have had the assurance of one or the other of these great powers behind the throne of railroad construction, that they would be supplied. None of these promises were ever fulfilled, affecting Eastern Oregon. The people have read and read and became weary of "railroads on paper." No one seemed to understand why there should be so much railroad talk and so little construction. No one seemed to understand either, why some one of the many railroad projects surveyed and contemplated by independent companies did not materialize. These short lines and cut-offs start out all right and possibly build a few miles of road, when all of a sudden halt would be called from some apparently powerful, yet unseen source. These independent companies striving to push their road thru to some desired terminal, would secure promises from Harriman or some other power, and then came the "railroads on paper."

Why the promises of Harriman were never fulfilled, probably no one but Mr. Hill knows, and why the promises of Hill were never fulfilled no one but Mr. Harriman knows. They were at war, and neither ever let an opportunity pass to head off his opponent, and neither ever contemplated a new short line or a cut-off that the other fellow didn't interfere with operation the result of which would interfere with any grade line might be made in the new lines or roads.

Independent companies might undertake to build, but before they passed a dangerous point one or the other of these great powers would be found to hold the upper hand and the other could do little to restrain.

The Wool Market

Better than 2 cents is offered for wool here, but little remains unsold. Sheepmen are not very sorry they sold us they have had the use of one-third of the money and they received it very good price. Although 30 cents per pound looks good to some of them.

We have listed with a number of sheepmen who are now holding on to the price. They expected wool to be a better price, but needed grain to live on. The time has come when we must let the market take care of itself. It would be unwise to believe buyers would raise the price. They maintain that had enough of the growers refused to contract, so that there would have been enough left to make it an object for buyers to come in, they would have held theirs. If 500 bales of wool had been held out of the contracts it would have made it safe to hold off. They did not expect the raise to come so early; and it is possible had a majority of growers held their wool, the advance would not occurred as early as it has.

Buyers know that shearing and dipping is apt to injure the small grower and may force him to sell, and probably would have taken advantage of these conditions, and of course our local merchants who bought, did so at prices dictated by big buyers.

It is also possible that had not the majority of the wool been in the hands of heavy buyers prices would not have been as high as they are now. There is "tricks in all trades." If two-thirds of the 1905 crop of wool in the United States could be bought up for 80 cents, for the remaining third dealers might pay 25 cents, thus the entire crop would be practically worth 25 cents, and a 3% cent profit would be made on two-thirds of the crop, while if 25 cents were paid for all of it a like profit could not be had without an abnormal value which might flood the market with foreign wool. Consequently there is little cause for grief on the part of those who sold at the former price. It is not likely that the advance in the price has been made expressly to benefit the growers. The middle man is going to reap the principal benefit.

Senator Fulton has recommended T. M. Dimmick of Coos county for receiver of the Roseburg land office. Secretary Hitchcock is standing firmly by J. M. Lawrence of Bend, but not insisting on his appointment. The secretary is firm in his endeavor to keep Mitchell men out of office in Oregon. He has no other objection to Dimmick than that investigation of Dimmick's case shows him to have been a Mitchell man.

We understand that there are five cases of smallpox in Alturas and that the town is quarantined. The stage carrying through mail either way goes around the town. This is a safe protection against the spread of the dreaded disease. One case is reported in Pine Creek, Oregon State, and he was sent to a house up the canyon to prevent a spread there. It is about stamped out in Lakeview.
