ALBERT W. TOLMAN

D[illegible] the largest four-horse wagon [illegible] many pounds a month for [illegible] ing behind the pole chains the wagon-stock straddling it to take up the jar of the seat. Then he paused on his [illegible] "grabs," and began to pitch his load of lime-rock, piece by piece, into the gradually filling pit that yawned below him, vomiting forth a ceaseless tide of smoke and heat.

Underneath, in the body of the kiln, were [illegible] of lime-rock in every [illegible] ing from the thoroughly-calcined [illegible] at the bottom—[illegible] brown men shoveling out and [illegible] off to prepare them for packing in the casks. To the [illegible] ments last thrown in at the top, [illegible] with coal, soon, but not yet [illegible] enough to show any signs of [illegible]. From this point of vantage which the archer held a steady blast of streaming flame shot out at the fore-end craft, [illegible] a tongue of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
