Death of Mrs. W. O. Smith.
Mrs. W. O. Smith, wife of the editor of the Klamath Republican, died at Klamath Falls August 15, 1906, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Applegate. The cause of death, says the Klamath Falls papers, was complications arising from the premature birth of a baby boy the Sunday preceding her death. Jessie Applegate was born in Klamath county April 18, 1883, and was reared there, receiving a common school education in Klamath Falls, and later attending the Monmouth and Ashland Normals, and taking an elocutionary course in Los Angeles. She was married to W. O. Smith, editor of the K. F. Republican the latter part of last year. She was an estimable woman and all who knew her loved her. She leaves a husband and infant son, her parents, two sisters and one brother, besides a large circle of sorrowing friends to mourn their loss.

The New Fashions in Skirts.

"The closest attention must be paid to the fitting of the present-day skirt, whether it be short or long," writes Helen Berkeley-Loyd in the September Bellmeator, "for a false line about the hips is a defect that cannot be concealed. The new short skirt is a bit shorter than we have recently seen it; hence the shoes and hosiery worn with it must be of high grade, corresponding with each other and with the gown to which they belong. Kilted continues popular; the plaits growing narrower and more numerous and fitting more carefully to the hips. The French models show much shirring, and in response the American dressmakers are introducing gores gathered or gauged into the belt, between groups of plaits. The newest modification of the fashionable circular skirt has a bias effect in the front and at the sides and full plaits in the back. It is also marked by the revived graduated flounce. In tailored gowns the line of union is left plain, or else it is emphasized by a shaped fold finished with fine cord. Occasionally this fold is built up in a sort of ladder-work of narrow bands of cloth or of rows of soutache dyed to match the goods. There are strong indications that the apron front will presently be revived, and some of the most jealously guarded importations show a still more daring innovation in the lines of the skirt. For example, a chiffon velvet gown in cut-strawberry color has its front gore laid in shallow but unmistakable drapery folds, just below the belt and parallel with its dip. The ends of these drapery curves disappear beneath the narrow box-plaits in the adjoining gores.

BOONE & MULKEY.

The Adin Argus reports that Tehama county sheep men are already moving their sheep toward the lower country. By reason of the establishment of forest reserves the range has proved inadequate to support the large number of foreign sheep, but there will be that much more left for our own flocks and herds. Doubtless the Lakeview Examiner can find in every one of these foreign sheep owners bitter opponents of forest reserves.—Alturas Plaindealer. (Why are they "foreign sheep owners"?)
