(Coppergie, 1904, by J. Conun Dayle and Collier's Westly)

T was in the year '95 that a combination of events into which I need not enter caused Mr. Shertock Holmes and myself to spend some weeks in one of our great university towns, and it was during this time that the small but instructive neventure which I am about to relate befold us. It will be obvious that any details which would help the reader to exactly identify the college or the collisions would be injudicious and offensive aspainful a scandal may well be all aved to die out. With due discretion the incident itself may, however, be to the ed, smea it serves to illustrate some of those qualities for which my friend was remarkable. I will endeavor in my statement to avoid such terms as would serve to limit the events to any particular place or give a clew as to the people concerned

We were residing at the time in furnished lodgings close to a library where Sherlock Holmes was pursuing some laborious researches in early English charters-researches which led to results so striking that they may be the subject of one of my future narratives. Here it was that one evening we received a visit from an acquaintance, Mr. Hilton Soames, tutor and lecturer at the College of St. Luke's. Mr. Soames was a tall, spare man, of a nervous and excitable temperament. I had always known him to be restless in his manner, but en this particular o-casion bewas in such a state of uncontrollable agitation that it was clear something very unusual had occurred.

"I trust, Mr. Holmes, that you can spare me a few hours of your valuable time. We have had a very painful incident at St. Luke's, and really, but for the happy chance of your being in town, I should have been at a loss what to do."

"I am very busy just now, and I desire no distractions," my friend answered. "I should much prefer that you called in the aid of the police."

"No, no, my dear sir; such a course is utterly impossible. When once the law is evoked it cannot be stayed again, and this is just one of those cases where, for the credit of the college, it is most essential to avoid scandal. Your discretion is as well known as your powers and you are the one man in the world who can help me. I beg you, Mr. Holmes, to do what you

My friend's temper had not improved since he had been deprived of the congenial surroundings of street. Without his semplook, his chemicals and his homely untidiness he was an uncomfortable man. He shrugged his choulders in ungracious equiscence, while our visitor is hurried words and with much eveltable gesticulation paired forth his story.

"I must explain to you. Mr. Holmes that tomorrow is the first day of the examination for the Portisens scholarstip. I am one of the examiners. My subject is Greek, and the first of the supers consists of a large passage of dreed from divion which the emelidate has an seen. This passage is printed on the examination paper, and it would naturally be an immense advantage if the candidate could prepare It in advance. For this reason great care is taken to keep the paper secret. "Today about 3 o'elock the proofs:

the door when he came out. This visit to my room must have been within a very few minutes of my leaving it. His forgetfulness about the key would have mattered little upon any other oceasion, but on this one day it has produced the most deplorable consequences.

"The moment I looked at my table i was aware that some one had rum maged among my papers. The proof was in three long silps. I had left them all together. Now I found that Ine of them was lying on the floor, one was on the side table near the will low and the third was where I had bee it?" Holmes stirred for the first time.

I was at my wits' ends when auddenly the happy thought occurred to me that you were in the town, and I came straight round to put the matter and whose have by is absolutely above into your hands. Do help me, Mr. Holmes. You see my dilemma. "I shall be happy to look into it and to give you such advice as I can," said Holmes, rising and putting on his overcoat. "The case is not entirely devoidof interest. The man entered and took the papers, sheet by sheet, from the central table. He carried them over to the window table, because from there he could see if you came across the courtyard and so could effect an escape."

"Well, he wrote so furiously that he broke his pencil, and had, as you observe, to sharpen it again. This is of interest, Watson. The pencil was not an ordinary one. It was above the usual size, with a soft lead, the outer color was dark blue, the maker's name was printed in silver lettering. and the piece remaining is only about an inch and a half long. Look for such a pencil, Mr. Soames, and you have got your man. When I add that he pesseeses a large and very binnt knife you have an additional aid."
