POPULAR NUTS.

Pecans, Some Good Hickory Nuts and a Supposed Hybrid.

Pecan culture is getting a substantial boom. Choice varieties are being extensively propagated and planted, The chances of ultimate profit in growing this popular nus would appear quite promising where plantings are made on the right soil in a suitable climate, says Rural New Yorker in notes on the pecan and, more particularly, the hickory nut. The pecan is, however, a southern species and is not successfully grown in the east north of the Obio valley. The trees are fairly hardy even in the latitude of Long Island, but a longer season is needed to ripen the nuts.

Pecans are most at home in rich alluvial soils in the gulf states. Great

A few experts only have been able to increase blekories by grafting. Better success is reportflute bud method. The pecan (Hicoria pecan) and the shagbark (H. ovata) meet in the Mississippi valley as the latter extends its Florida. It would appear possible that hybrids between these valuable specles may be produced in time, and it Is easy to imagine the good qualities they should possess. A supposed hybrid between the western shellburk (H. inclnosa) and the pecan was figured and described by the late A. S. Fuller in 1884 under the name of Nu shaumer's hybrid. The nuts were described as large, thin shelled, sweet and good,

Rooting Poinsettlas,

Many growers have trouble in rooting their poinsettla cuttings. It is a good plan about a week before taking the cutting from the parent plant to make a nick or uppercut in the stalk at the place it is intended to take the cutting. This may be done in much the same way that a cut is made in a rubber plant before wrapping it with moss, though the knife should not go too deep, as a very slight cut will bleed a poinsettla. In about a week a callus will have formed, and the cutting should then be removed and placed in the sand. It will root better than one which has not been so treated.-Gardening.

Gumming of Peach Trees. Excessive gumming of peach and plum trees may be relieved by slitting the bark and the first layer from the ground to the branching, making the slits about three inches apart. Cas Poisoning.

After four years' experience with street trees I conclude that the sudden death of a vigorous street free is prima facle evidence of a gas leak. As for example, I have noted several trees which were vigorous last sums mer that falled to put out leaves the past spring. A gas lenk was found in each case, says a writer on this subject.
