Geo. McGrath met with a very painful accident last Saturday morning. He and Bern were hauling hay out to the stock. They had the wagon loaded and Bern was on the ground cleaning up the scattered hay. George jumped from the stack down on the wagon, and at the same time Bern threw his fork up on the load, not noticing that George had jumped down. George struck the fork with his knee and fell, driving one of the fork tines under his knee-cap to the bone. He came up town to have the injury treated, and was very lame when he went home.
