History of The Shropshire

About 100 years ago there were in southern England a number of shep herds who owned flocks which were rich in Southdown blood, writes a correspondent of Shepherd's Criterion, but hese sheep were small and sheared a light fleece, so their owners desired to increase the size of both carcass and fleece. With this object in view they went to the leading Leicester breed ers in parts of England lying farther to the north and selected very choice rams to cross upon their smaller ewes. This crossbreeding and improving were continued for a number of years, and then the breeders had sheep which were nearing their ideal-a sheep with good size, a very dense fleece of medium length and a first class mutton carcass. These sheep were being bred on chalky hills and so were necessarily very hardy, but were not bred for such extreme size as that of the Lincoln,

SDEOPSHIEE RAM.

Leicester and Cotswold, which are matured where feed is much more plentiful and where the sheep do not have to rustle to get it.

This new sheep was meeting the approval of many farmers and was considered to be a "happy medium," as it would be termed nowadays. There were getting to be no many of these sheep that it was found necessary to give them a name. As they were quite popular in southern England, especially in Shropshire, it was decided to call them Shropshires, and so it is today. Improvement was kept up vigorously, and in the year 1853 Shropshires were given a classification at the English Royal agricultural show. A flock book was established, and the breed was on a solid footing.

In 1884 a Shropshire record was established in Indiana. This association has grown so rapidly that now there are between 3,000 and 4,000 members. and it has issued certificates of registry for about 215,000 sheep.

Winter Care of Sheep.

It is poor economy to let the sheep live on the frozen grass-if the ground is free of snow-after winter has set in and the other thinly clad stock are safely housed, says E. Van Alstyne in Rural New Yorker. True, such grass will fill them, but there is a great difference between filling and feeding. It will also contribute much to their comfort, as well as to the pocket of the owner, if the dirty wool is elipped away from about the tall. If the hoofs have grown long on the ends or sides, this growth should be pared off with a good sharp knife. Then keep plenty of pure water where the sheep can have access to it at all times, a box of salt sprinkled with turpentine to which they can run, clean, dry bedding to lie on, with all food removed that has not been eaten the previous meal.

Dividing the Flock.

There are a few things that one must get ready for the flock's use in winter. The first thing to consider is space, says Michigan Farmer. Twelve square feet is ample room for a breeding ewe in winter quarters. The flock can all remain together until the lambs begin to appear. In some cases it is a good thing to divide the ewes that are about to lamb from the flock. Sometimes the flock must be divided into two or more classes. A good division would be the main flock, the ewes that evidently will soon lamb, the ewes already lambed. These divisions may be best made by use of panels or by the placing of the feed racks. Permanent divisions are not advisable since the areas of the spaces will be constantly changing.

Rations For Stallions.

Raw eggs afford a very nourishing. cooling and easily digested feed for stallions when doing a large business in the stud. A half dozen may be broken and stirred into the grain ration night and morning to great advantage in many cases. The grain ration may be somewhat diminished when eggs are fed. Such a ration adds somewhat to the expense or cost of keep, but a single additional foal will more than pay cost of all the eggs that any stallion will require during the entire sea-

Scours In Pigs.

A common ailment among young pigs is scours. Like thumps, it is brought on by too much rich food, augmented by damp, chilly bedding. There are many so called remedies for scours, such as sulphur, parched corn or parched flour, etc. Perhaps the best treatment is to shut off the swill bucket, which is usually the direct cause, keep the bedding dry and give plenty of fresh air, fresh water and dry feed.

The Sheep Outlook.

There is not a single sign denoting that either wool or mutton will be selling at begging prices again for a good many years to come, if ever. The demand for both is increasing while the world's flocks, according to the best authorities, are decreasing.-American Sheep Breeders.
