Dad Murphy's Message To the Superintendent

OLD DAD MURPHY, as he was affectionately known to the boys on the road, was a conductor on a trunk line transporting large shipments of live stock from the west. Dad had been in the service so long that the rules of railroading had become second nature to him, and the result of the superintendent's frequent orders to the trainmen to answer with military brevity all questions and messages, especially those by telegraph, to relay the burden on the wires, had reduced Dad to habitually short, concise replies even in his conversation. On a baking hot July day, when not a breath of air was stirring and the sun beat on the car roofs till the pitch pulled the soles of the men's shoes, Dad, in looking over his daily, discovered that eight bags had accumulated at the west, when passing the next telegraph station, he threw off a message to the superintendent.

Dear Sir: Eight bags dead wood's here, please. MURPHY, NO. 78.

At the second telegraph office Dad received his answer:

Murphy, Condr. 78. What is the present condition of the road? Ask Mr. BURLIN.

Dad grunted, shifted his grip of flag and wrote as follows:

Dear Sir: Good as dead. MURPHY, 78. Judge's Library.

Why He Quit the Game.

"Take a hand!" queried Smith as Jones stood watching the poker game at the table.

"No, quit!"

"What's the matter—cold feet?"

"No, I always come out loser."

"I never saw you lose in my life."

"I never saw you ever save me, but I know, if I happen to win a little here, my wife will buy me a new suit."

"I'll bet you'll win a little here, but my wife will buy me a new suit when I go home. If I lose I get a lecture on the evils of gambling, and the next day, in order to get even, my wife runs bills down to the amount I lost. If I tell her I came out just even, she tells her half the money to prevent my losing all I have, so I am bound to lose."

—Baltimore Telegram.

She Had the Arms.

"Ah, Miss Strong, you're a regular Venus!" and Jack Harvey as he attempted to kiss her.

"That's what!" she replied as she gave him a right arm jab on the nose and followed it up with a left arm swing to the jaw. "You fortunate! The 'Venus of Milo'—Philadelphia Press.

The Week-End School.

"Did you get damages for being in that railway accident, Bill?"

"Sure; $50 for me and fifty for the infants."

"The infants? I didn't hear she was hurt."

"She wasn't; but I had the presence of mind to fetch her one on the head with my foot."—Harper's Weekly.

Too Much For Him.

A Safe Memorial.

"Yes," said the Billville widow, "I want to give John a good, heavy monument."

"A heavy one?"

"Of course. Nothin' less than three tons will ever hold him down. I want to be quite sure of him."—Atlanta Constitution.

Mild Appreciation.

"I suppose you enjoy classical music," said the artistic person.

"No," answered Mr. Cumrox, "I don't exactly enjoy it, but as a social diversion it's more interesting than trying to keep up a conversation."—Washington Star.

Laborious.

"Young man, when I was a boy I had to work for my own living."

"Well, gunner, there's nothing much harder than working you for a living."—New York Life.

Value of Economy.

"Don't you think you're wasting your time talking the value of economy to Blank? He hasn't any money."

"I know it, but I have."—Detroit Free Press.

Infantile Disposition.

Willie—Gee! Do they let you go to swell parties?

Gracie—Lots of 'em. I'm getting societer and societer every day.—Detroit Tribune.

MAJORITY RULE

SIX STATES AND OVER A HUNDRED LEGISLATORS.

Repealed Labor a Leading Factor in Securing Victory Won For the Direct Vote Idea—Various Systems Prescribed.

In the 1904 election six states voted for some form of the initiative and referendum or elected a majority in the legislature pledged to such a system, while nationally 107 members of the next house are pledged to the establishment of a national direct vote system.

The states are Massachusetts, Maine, Delaware, Michigan, Montana and Oklahoma. Previous to 1904 other states had adopted the direct vote system of the voters had decided for it. These states are Oregon, South Dakota, Illinois, Ohio, Utah and Texas. Nevada has the referendum.

In Delaware there was an advisory referendum vote in 1904. The legislature to establish a national initiative and advisory referendum. The vote was in the affirmative 2 to 1.

In Massachusetts the house and senate are pledged to establish the initiative, referendum and advisory referendum. In Montana the legislature is pledged to establish the initiative and referendum. In the two preceding legislatures the initiative passed a measure which was defeated in the senate.

In Oklahoma nearly all the legislators elected to the constitutional convention, which assembled Nov. 23, are pledged to participate in the proposed system of government, the initiative, referendum and recall.

To-day many both the leading parties are pledged to establish a constitutional amendment for a national initiative and referendum.

Recently every reformer who has been declared for the moving cause has been the organization that do not nominate for office—referendum leagues, labor unions and granges. The national movement has been the organization of candidates. This has raised the issue, and most of the leading candidates have pledged or were defeated.

In cities, too, this partisan system and the pledging of the ablest candidates for the advisory referendum and advisory referendum have restored the people's power in local affairs. In Illinois, Ill. was state emancipated from machine rule this year. Buffalo has possessed the system for two years and Detroit, Mich., for four years. Winnetka, Ill., where the system originated, has used the advisory referendum for ten years.

The only difference between the initiative and referendum and the advisory system of that name is that the vote under the initiative and referendum is legally binding, while under the advisory system the vote is merely binding. The moral obligation is completely effective, however, for the legislative candidates while up for office are pledged in writing to obey the will of their constituents when expressed by referendum vote.

The establishment of the advisory system is much easier than the securing of a constitutional amendment, and it leads to constitutional changes.

For these reasons Massachusetts and Delaware have made their start against machine rule by instituting for the advisory initiative and advisory referendum. Illinois has the advisory initiative, and nationally 107 members of the next house are pledged to the advisory initiative and advisory referendum. The national program, however, limits the system at the start to eight legislative topics—namely, immigration, commerce, civil service, immigration, trial by jury or any modification of the law of injunction, eight hour day in government contract work and the submission of constitutional amendments for the initiative and referendum, election of United States senators by the people and election of fourth class postmasters by the patrons of each class.

This national movement has been brought to its present stage through the combined efforts of referendum leagues, the American Federation of Labor and state granges in sixteen states. The A. F. of L. and the labor representation committee endorsed the questions, which were presented by the National Federation for People's Rule, largely composed of referendum leagues.

The argument that is advanced for the proposed national system for direct voting is that its establishment will banish machine rule and restore majority rule—in other words, will restore the government to the form in which it existed in the days of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. At that time the voters instructed at will at town meetings in rural New England and elsewhere at mass meetings. Furthermore, the candidates for the state legislature and for the national house were pledged by districts and not by machine ruled state and national conventions.

The Austrian law compels mine owners to build "rescue chambers" underground. The room must be large enough to hold at least twenty-four people and must be provided with tinned food, medicine chest, first aid material, inhalation apparatus and compressed oxygen in cylinders sufficient to last at least three days.

Progress For Majority Rule. Bridgeport, Conn., is one of organized labor's strongholds. This year nearly all its members of the legislature are pledged to the initiative and referendum, and it is certain that measures for the establishment of this reform will be introduced.
