COMPOUND INTEREST

The trouble with most advertisers is that they expect immediate returns of large proportions. One prominent advertiser illustrates the principle of advertising in this way:

"The money expended for advertising is the same as if placed at interest. The profits from the advertising are virtually the interest on the investment.

"The sums spent for advertising are properly chargeable to capital account because the resulting good will is something that has value, which, if the advertising has been properly done, can usually be sold for the face value of the investment.

"The rate of interest is determined by the skill with which the investment is made.

"Just as the quickest way to increase invested wealth is by compounding the interest, just so the quickest way to realize results from advertising is to compound the returns."—Advertising Experience.

Senator Bankhead - Peabody and His Bomb - Rear Admiral Sperry. General Davis - Secretary Garfield and Pete the Bulldog - Sir Eldon Gorst.

JOHN H. BANKHEAD.

JOHN H. BANKHEAD, former congressman, who was appointed by Governor Comer of Alabama to fill the vacancy in the United States senate made by the death of Senator John T. Morgan, holds his appointment only until the meeting of the legislature July 10, when that body will choose some one to serve out the unexpired term of Mr. Morgan. Mr. Bankhead ran first in the Democratic primary for alternate senator last August. He and former Governor Joseph E. Johnston were selected at the primary to fill any vacancies that might occur by either of the sitting members from Alabama dying or being incapacitated. His appointment by Governor Comer is considered to strengthen his chances of election by the legislature. In 1904 he contested the Democratic nomination to the house of representatives with Captain Richmond P. Hobson and defeated the man who sank the Merrimac. Two years later Captain Hobson defeated him in the contest for the same nomination and was elected to congress.

Mr. Bankhead is a native of Alabama and about sixty-five years old. He is an ex-Confederate officer, a former and served in ten congresses. He has a weakness for gambling stories. One that he tells is of a time when an attempt was being made to drive gamblers out of Mobile. A witness was testifying for the defense, and it was well known that the judge was a skillful poker player. The witness talked of "going blind," "raising," "passing" and so on, and finally his honor said gravely: "Mr. Jackson, you are using a good many of what I presume are technical terms. Will you be good enough to explain some of them?" The witness, with equal gravity, replied, "I shall be pleased to do so, your honor, if you will kindly let me have your poker deck for a few moments."

It was a dramatic moment in the Haywood trial in Idaho when former Governor Peabody of Colorado entered the courtroom and handled the bomb which Harry Orchard confessed to having made for the governor's destruction. Another spectacular episode was the meeting between the ex-governor and Orchard. The latter was much affected and almost broke down at being greeted by the man whose life he had sought, but the former executive of the Centennial State reassured him, remarking, "I understand how it GOVERNOR PEABODY AND THE BOMB, was with you." The dynamite had been taken from the death dealing machine when it was introduced in court, but it looked gruesome nevertheless. When Governor Peabody came into court he took a seat near the desk on which the formidable looking object was lying.

"Here's your bomb, governor," whispered one of the correspondents. Mr. Peabody reached forward and with a half smile measured with his hands the instrument which had been made to hurl him into eternity.

"It's pretty big," said he. Mr. Peabody was governor of Colorado from 1903 to 1905 and was sworn in for a second term after having been declared re-elected by the legislature, but resigned, according to agreement, in favor of the man elected lieutenant governor. He is fifty-five years old and a native of Vermont.

Rear Admiral Charles S. Sperry, president of the war college at Newport, represents the naval branch of Uncle Sam's fighting force in the peace conference at The Hague. He was born in New York in 1847 and was educated in the public schools, Waterbury academy, Connecticut, and at the United States Naval academy, from which he graduated in 1866. He married Miss Edith Marcy, daughter of Governor William L. Marcy of New York. He became an ensign in 1868 and rose steadily through the different grades until reaching his present rank. He is a member of the general board of the navy and is considered a high authority on the subject of international law as it affects naval warfare.

REAR ADMIRAL CHARLES S. SPERRY.

James R. Garfield, who has been working hard since March 1 to make a record as secretary of the Interior, is a great admirer of his official chief, the president, and his fondness for Mr. Roosevelt's society is so pronounced that it has sometimes attracted good humored comment. He is a leading member of the "tennis cabinet," goes on horseback rides with President Roosevelt and in general is seen much in the latter's company. A story was printed not long ago that he was to have a folding bed in a convenient room in the White House so as not to miss any more of the chief magistrate's society than necessary. Of course this was a joke, as was also the story that the object of the president in acquiring the bulldog known as Pete was to give an element of dignity to visits to the White House by admirer's friends after dark and thus diminish the number of such visits. Whatever the reason Secretary Garfield's visits became somewhat less frequent from that time. Various yarns

JAMES R. GARFIELD - PETE THE BULLDOG. Have been told about the more or less mythical exploits of Pete, and he was celebrated as follows by James J. Montague in the New York American: A certain dog named Cerberus, so run the tales of yore, was wont to tree the ghosts that roamed on Night's Plutonian shore. Ulysses' faithful Argos, when the former came from Troy, was so delighted that he died of unaffectioned joy. Through all recorded history have sundry dogs had claim. And had their several claims allowed, to various sorts of fame, We grant the laurel cheerfully to many a whose name rings down the corridors of echoing time—and yet

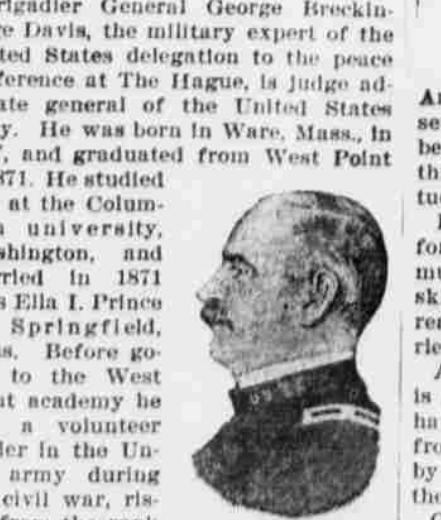

When Pete patrols the White House grounds, and in their own behalf Three million men and an envoy are departing for the roof. When Pete is backed against the wall, and left to his own fate, And Corcoran has shed his coat that he may frolic free. When two supreme court judges o'er the bench's tightly leap. Some portion of their raiment, which they leave for Pete to keep, We gladly let historic dogs enjoy their little day. For Pete upholds the honor of the U. S. A.

Sir Eldon Gorst, the new British consul general in Egypt, holds an office that is really more important than might appear from its name. He is to all intents and purposes the ruler of Egypt and succeeds in that post Lord Cromer, who has been described as "the maker of modern Egypt." The latter found the country almost ruined, her people desperate with suffering, her very existence in peril from the dervishes, and he left her in splendid prosperity, her finances on a firm basis and her people increasing in numbers. The new Egypt has aspirations to rule itself, and it will be Sir Eldon Gorst's duty to pave the way for some sort of constitutional government. Though a Conservative, he was appointed by a Liberal government because he was considered the man best fitted by training and capacity to fill the position. He is forty-six years old and the eldest son of Sir John Eldon Gorst, who is still living. He was named after his father. When his ability brought him a knighthood he dropped his first name that there might not be two Sir Johns in the family. But in Egypt everybody still speaks of him as Johnnie Gorst. He went there when twenty-six as an attaché and rose rapidly through the diplomatic grades. He was financial adviser to the Egyptian government when in 1903 he was summoned to London to assist the foreign office in the negotiations which resulted in the Anglo-French agreement that so largely contributed to giving England a free hand in Egypt. His services were rewarded by the bestowal upon him of one of the most responsible positions in the permanent civil service, that of under-secretary of state for foreign affairs.

SIR ELDON GORST.

Brigadier General George Breckinridge Davis, the military expert of the United States delegation to the peace conference at The Hague, is judge advocate general of the United States army. He was born in Ware, Mass., in 1847, and graduated from West Point in 1871. He studied law at the Columbian university, Washington, and married in 1871 Miss Ella I. Prince of Springfield, Mass. Before going to the West Point academy he was a volunteer soldier in the Union army during the civil war, rising from the rank of sergeant to a second lieutenant before his eighteenth birthday. He was professor of law at West Point from 1895 to 1900 and reached his present rank in 1901. He is the author of a number of works on international law.

BRIGADIER GENERAL GEORGE BRECKINRIDGE DAVIS.

The One Advantage. Jiggers—Well, how do you like living in a flat? Jiggers—Great! Splendid! Jiggers—But you haven't as much room as you had in your house. Jiggers—That's just it—no room for my wife's relatives.—Cleveland Leader.

HERE AND THERE.

Hints For the Trousseau—Coats of Dyed Lace—Neck Ruff Smart. The bride who is wise will include in her wardrobe all the fancy jewelry she can afford to buy. She should have strings of beads and as many of them as possible. She should select them with an eye to the matching of her trousseau frocks, and she should be sure to include belts, buckles and small ornaments in the way of little pins and slides and fastenings. Evening coats of dyed lace are very lovely, though sometimes it seems like rank extravagance to color so hand some a lace as Irish point to meet what must at long be a passing fancy. A handsome long empire coat of Irish lace seen not long ago was of rich red wine color called mulberry trimmed with chiffon to match.

Neck ruffs are extremely popular this summer. They are made short and finished with long ends of soft satin or velvet ribbon. For older women these neck pieces are very pretty when shaped a little like a collar. They are made with rows of knife plating of varying widths arranged upon a silk or satin foundation and finished with long loops and ends of ribbon.

The frock in the cut is of French voile in a lovely shade of nut brown. Silk ends trim the pretty model. Gumples and sleeves are of cream batiste. JUDIC COLLETT.

WHAT IS WORN.

Panama Hats Very Smart For Morning Wear—Blouse Traveling Suits. The scarf trimmed panama hat is in most of its forms a rather youthful type of headgear, but when cleverly bent and trimmed, it is peculiarly fitting for morning wear. Long chiffon scarfs knotted behind and falling low on the shoulders are very often substituted for the scarfs of old and form a becoming background for a pretty face. Black and white striped muslin will make many smart afternoon frocks.

A STYLISH LINEN GOWN—5424, 5664.

An attractive model has a skirt of seven or nine gores gathered into the belt. At the bottom is a decoration of three ruffles edged with clumsy lace tucks or narrow black velvet ribbon.

Blouse suits are to be much worn for traveling this summer; they are so much more sensible than a coat and skirt gown, for when the weather is really warm the jacket has to be carried on the arm.

A pretty use for short ostrich plumes is an arrangement at the back of the hat, which is of course turned up in front. The round crown is encircled by a soft satin ribbon, and far back on the side is a stiff bunch of roses.

Old fashioned stockings of white lisle thread, such as were worn in our grandmothers' days, are to have a great vogue this summer and are prominently displayed in the shops.

French tussore is making many stunning tailor made suits. This material is expensive, but is much handsomer than the domestic materials of the same class. It comes in delicious shades of pink, blue, lilac, etc., as well as in the dark colors.

White linen made in shirt waist style and braided with soutache is one of the smartest things for morning wear and has the merit of being both durable and fashionable. Illustrated is a model that is exceedingly simple and smart. JUDIC COLLETT.
